

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

CHAPTER I.

LIFE'S JOURNEY.

WHAT is our life? It is a Journey, that is soon ended—a Tale, that is quickly told—a Day, whose hours roll by apace. It is a Vapour, which rises for a while, and then vanishes—a Flame, that burns for a moment or two, and then flickers in the socket, and presently goes out. Our little life-time, oh, how short it is!

And what are your thoughts, my aged friend, about this journey of life? Once you looked upon it as a very different thing from what it appears to you now. Once it seemed to you as if the days of your childhood would never pass away. You longed for manhood or womanhood ; but it came very slowly. The early stages of your journey seemed almost endless. And, if it had been possible, you would willingly have taken a spring, and jumped into middle-life at a bound. But now you look back, and wonder how quickly your life has passed. It seems but yesterday you were a child. Old age has crept on, almost without your knowing it.

Truly the longest life is but a little while, when compared with eternity. It is but as a tiny drop in the wide ocean ; but as a grain of sand on the boundless shore—"so soon passeth it away, and we are gone." And when we look forward, how soon shall we be in our graves ! A few more days, and we shall come to the end of our span. Very soon "the silver cord" will be "loosed," "the golden bowl" will be "broken," "the pitcher" will be fairly worn out, "the wheel" will make its last turn; and then we shall "go to our long home, and the mourners go about the streets." Eccles. xii. 5, 6.

Now, I want you presently to open your Bible, and turn to the Ninetieth Psalm. Take it, and ponder it over in your heart; and I think you will find it very profitable sometimes to use it as a prayer for yourself. It is not certain who was the writer of that Psalm. But whoever wrote it must, I think, have been an old man; and he must have written it on purpose for those of his brethren who are going down the hill of life.

I once heard of an Aged Christian, who used to be very fond of applying the Ninety-first Psalm to himself. He loved to think how truly it set forth the faithfulness of God to him during his long life. When he was on his death-bed, he exclaimed, in the words of the last verse, “‘With long life has He satisfied me;’ and now I am going to enjoy the only portion which I could not have in this life—He is going to ‘show me His salvation.’”

Perhaps, dear reader, you are drawing to the close of a long life. It may be that your thoughts have long been turned heavenwards. And, if so, I know that a word of counsel will be welcome to you. But if, on the other hand, you have been thoughtless hitherto, I wish to make you thoughtful now. Whatever has been your past history, I want to give you in this book a few hints, as to how you may turn to the best account the time which still remains to you. I want to do you some good. I want to make your last days the best and happiest of all your life.

I observe that Old Persons are in some respects much alike, but in other respects are very different.

They are alike in their infirmities. Their limbs shake and totter. Their bodies have grown weak. The clay house they dwell in is the worse for wear. Their minds too have lost their former strength. Memory fails them. They can recollect what happened years and years ago; but what happened yesterday is gone—all is a blank.

They are alike too in their sorrows. They have known what affliction is. Some have had to mourn over thoughtless, and undutiful, and rebellious children. Some have had to weep over many an open grave. Some have found, from sad experience, that the world is but a sorry house to live in. In these respects, old people are much alike.

But, in other respects, how different they are! Some are rich, while others are poor. Some have but few cares and troubles in their declining years, whilst others are burdened with anxieties. Some again have many friends around them who show them kindness, whilst others are left alone with no one to care for them.

But there is a still greater difference between those who are far advanced in years. Here is one stooping and groaning under his heavy burden—vexed with all around him—full of complainings—discontented with his lot—having no pleasure in life, and yet clinging to it as a drowning man grasps at the only plank that is left—tired of this world, and yet having no hope beyond it.

We see another with the same grey head, and the same bent body; but there is a beam that lights up his aged countenance. He is thankful, contented, peaceful. All goes well with him. He is willing—cheerfully willing—to bear all that God lays upon him. Not a murmur escapes his lips; not a distrustful feeling dwells within. There is a calm tide of joy flowing through his soul.

How is this? What makes all this difference? It is God's grace alone. This fills the heart with peace. This gives comfort and rest now, and awakens in the soul a sweet and blessed hope of joys to come.

Such an old age as this is most desirable, is it not? And such an old age, dear reader, is just what I desire for you. May it be your portion!

I once heard of an old man who was brought to God late in life. He desired that, when he died, these words might be written on his tombstone: "Here lies an old man of seven years of age."

And why so? The truth was, that all the past years of his long life he counted as no life at all, for his soul was dead. It was only during the last few years he had really lived, for he had then lived to God.

You are now grown old. The shades of evening are growing thick around you. You are come to the last stage of life's journey. Your state is something like that of Moses, when he had travelled for forty years through the wilderness, and was now come to his journey's end. The Lord announces to him that his death is near. But, before he departs, He bids him go up to the top of Pisgah, and look back on the path along which he has been brought, and look forward to the Land of Promise.

It must have been very good for him to take a survey of that winding path along which God had led him—to cast his eye back upon the many spots where mercy had been shown him—to call to mind all the difficulties and dangers he had passed through, and the gracious manner in which his God had borne with him, notwithstanding his many sins.

Now, this is just the survey which you should take, my aged friend. Get a quiet half-hour now and then, and look back into the past. It will be good for you, I am sure; and I counsel you to try it. I will help you to do so in the next chapter.

CHAPTER II.

THE DAYS THAT ARE PAST.

You remember that I spoke in my last chapter of what Moses did before he died. He was directed to go up on Mount Pisgah, and take a glimpse of that Promised Land which lay before him. But we can hardly fancy that this was all he did. It is more than likely that another purpose, for which he ascended that high hill, was that he might from thence take a survey of all the way that he had travelled in his wilderness journey. And I said that it would be well for you now and then to look back on all the years that you have passed through. Let me help you a little in doing this.

First, take a good searching look, and see what sins have marked your past life. And as you look back, you will feel, I dare say, that there is many an act which you would gladly blot out if you could. There are many days you would like to live over again, in the hope that you would live them better—many words you would like to recal—many a deed which you would give worlds to undo—many a bad thought which you encouraged, and which has left a stain behind, that even time cannot wear out.

I know it is very painful to be thinking about our sins; but we must not shrink from it. It is folly to deceive ourselves, and fancy that they have not been committed. There they are, and God sees them, if we will not. His eye marked them at the time, and it marks them still. They may almost have faded away from our memory; but God remembers them: He forgets nothing.

Old People are very apt to fancy that what is past and forgotten by them is also blotted out of the book of God's remembrance. Often, for instance, when the sins and follies of their youth are spoken of, they just heave a passing sigh, and that is all. They think that such things are excusable in times of youth, and that God will not be extreme to mark what was done amiss in those days. They fancy that the bygone past will not be laid to their charge, as they have since become wiser and more thoughtful.

But is it so? Is God such an one as ourselves? Can any length of time wear away our sins from His recollection? Is it not written that even “for every idle word that men shall speak, they must give an account”?

I am sure it is very good for us all, and especially for those who are drawing near to the close of life, to look fairly at the sins that we have committed, and not close our eyes upon them, and persuade ourselves that they do not exist. Indeed, if we have any spiritual life in us, whatever else we forget, surely we shall never forget those hateful sins which have defiled our souls.

But it is not enough to look at them in a sort of general way. We must fix upon them one by one, and draw them forth from their hiding-places. There must be a close searching for them, as with a candle—an honest, hearty, diligent search, so that not one shall escape us.

And what is the good of this? you are perhaps ready to ask. Is there any use in making ourselves unhappy? The thing is done: can it be undone?

Oh, surely it is far better to discover our sins now, than to have them brought to light for the first time when we appear before God. It is far better to know how we stand with God now, than to learn it in that world where there is no more hope for the sinner.

And what are you to do with your sins, when you have found them out? Is there any way, by which they can be got rid of? Or must they lie like dark spots on your soul—like unpaid debts which can never be cancelled? No, dear friend; no. There is a way—one only way—by which every sin committed, and every deed left undone, can be blotted out for ever.

Christ has paid your debt. He has bled for you on the cross. He has died, that you might live. And He is able at this moment, not only to pardon your every sin, but to cover you with His perfect righteousness, and to make you His for ever. "He is able to save them to the uttermost, that come unto God by Him."

Go now to Jesus, and ask Him to give you repentance. Ask Him, by His Holy Spirit, to touch your heart—to make you hate your sins, and mourn over them with godly sorrow. Oh, it is good for us to feel grief for our sins! And depend upon it, we shall grieve over them, if we are brought under the power of God's grace.

But, remember, sorrow and tears will not wash out the stain. They cannot remove one single atom of our guilt. No; it is only the sacrifice of Christ that can pay the debt. In Him alone forgiveness can be found. "The blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth us from all sin."

Here then, my dear friend, is the good of finding out our many sins. It is that we may get every one of them pardoned—It is that we may be made happy in Christ our Saviour. He is all power and love. He is able and willing to save. He says, "Come unto me, and I will give you rest." "Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool."

But there is something more we should look back upon, besides our sins; we should look back upon our many mercies.

Think of the numberless acts of love and kindness, which God has shown you during the years that are past. Moses called to mind, I daresay, those forty years in which the Lord had so greatly blessed him. The whole path which he had trodden was indeed strewed with mercies—mercies to himself, to his family, to his people. We are told that for forty years their “raiment waxed not old, neither did their feet swell.” When they were thirsty, “He brought streams out of the rock, and caused waters to run down like rivers.” When they were hungry, “He fed them with bread from heaven.” He led them, not by the shortest way, nor by the easiest path, but it was “by the right way,” to their promised land.

And has not the Lord dealt as graciously with you? Have not goodness and mercy followed you all your days? Think of your many deliverances from danger. Think how you have been spared, whilst others have been cut off. Think of this and that blessing, which came to you when you so little deserved it. Think of God's patience with you, when you provoked His anger. Think how He made one thing and another work round for your good. Many a time you said within yourself, "This thing is unfortunate—it is all against me;" and perhaps that very thing turned out to be for your greatest good.

God's past mercies should be a pledge to you of those which are to come. You may well plead with David, "O God, thou hast taught me from my youth: now when I am old and grey-headed, O God, forsake me not." You may expect further trials as you reach the remaining stages of the wilderness. But you may be sure that the manna with which you have been fed will not fail, nor the cloud of protection which has sheltered you be withdrawn, till your wanderings are over. Be assured, God never yet forsook a worn-out pilgrim. He never yet neglected an aged servant. You know that He has promised you, "Even to your old age, I am He; and even to hoar hairs, I will carry you. I have made, and I will bear; even I will carry and deliver you." The last words of good old Dr. Guyse were, "O my God! thou hast always been with me, and wilt not leave me now."

Think of all this, and it will warm your cold heart. You will find some love kindling within you, as you call to mind the goodness of that heavenly Friend, who has watched over you so lovingly, and cared for you from your childhood until now.

And oh! if you are a true servant of God—if you have been brought to know and love your Saviour—if the path of godliness has been your path—then is there not one mercy which out-tops every other in your case? Does not your heart throb with gratitude, when you think of that grace which called you out of darkness into the blessed light of God's truth, which turned your feet out of the path of sin and misery along which you were then hurrying, and brought you into the way of peace? Of all your mercies, there is none so great as that which led you to Christ, and made you a partaker of His great salvation.

It is said of John Newton, that, although his memory failed him in his old age, there were two things which he never forgot—one was, that “he was a great sinner;” and the other was, that “Jesus was a greater Saviour.”

Let me urge you then at once to take a look back on your past sins, and on your past mercies. This is especially needful for you who have lived many years in this world, and whose hour-glass has but a few grains yet to run out. Do so in a humble and thoughtful spirit, and I believe you will find that much good will come from it.

Take this, and any other counsels which I offer you, as coming from one who really cares for you. Yes, I feel for the Aged. I know their trials, their infirmities, and their difficulties. But I also know that the Saviour Himself cares for you. He has in store many and great blessings, which He is quite ready to bestow upon you. And what I desire, in this book, is to lead you to the enjoyment of them, so that yours may be a blessed and happy old age.

CHAPTER III.

THE DUTIES OF OLD AGE.

EVERY station and stage of life has its own special duties. Childhood has its duties; such as obedience to parents, modesty, willingness to be taught. A husband and wife have their duties; and a master or mistress theirs. Manhood has its duties; a grown-up man or woman are required to be useful in the world, and to live, not unto themselves, but unto the Lord.

And so too Old Age has its duties. I will mention some of them.

1. You should endeavour to be patient and gentle. Amidst all your pains and infirmities, how blessed if you can feel a cheerful submission to God's will, and if you can accept, not merely with resignation, but with actual thankfulness, all that He lays upon you. Now, God can give you this patient, humble, and submissive spirit, if you will earnestly and daily seek it from Him.

2. You should try to be cheerful, and considerate of others. Old people are apt to be crabbed and selfish, and to think only of their own troubles and wants. Guard against this; and seek to make those around you happy. Do not grudge young people those delights which you can no longer enjoy; but put yourself often in their place, and remember that you were once a child yourself. The very feeling that you are trying to make others happy will make you happy yourself.

3. Be much in Prayer, and in the Reading of God's Word. These are great helps to a Christian pilgrim: they are like so many staffs by the way. Use them diligently, and they will help you onward. As you read a little further in this Book, you will see some directions how to profit by the use of them.

4. You should sit loose to this world, and be in readiness to leave it. This, you will say, is the duty of us all. Yes, but it is especially your duty; for the clock of time seems now to be giving its warning sound in your ears. Every day seems now to be saying to you, "Prepare to meet thy God! The night is far spent; the day is at hand. The Judge standeth at the door."

It is a melancholy sight to see an old person bent down with years, standing at the edge of eternity, and yet unwilling to loose his hold of this world—clinging to life with an eager grasp—as much busied as ever with its trifling concerns—still thirsting for its poor pleasures, and yet unable to enjoy them—all before him a blank—having no hope as regards the future. Such an old age is indeed a sad one.

But you will perhaps say, Surely when any one has grown old, and when he has sown the wild oats of youth, he will, as a matter of course, become thoughtful, and turn his mind towards that world which he is so shortly to enter. But no ; this does not at all follow. On the contrary, I have seen many in old age just as worldly-minded as ever, and putting from them even then the thoughts of a life to come.

Dear friend, it is only grace that can make you anxious about your soul. It is only grace that can prepare you for eternity. We all need the powerful working of God's Spirit to draw our minds from earth to heaven, from sin to holiness.

Happy for you, if heaven is the home of your heart! Happy for you, if your thoughts are centered there! Happy for you, if you can say, "The world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world"! "We look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen."

5. Your conversation should be heavenly. Your time is nearly ended; and therefore you should not think much about this world which you are on the point of leaving. Its pleasures, its riches, its occupations should not occupy your mind. You should rather busy yourself about your journey to your everlasting home. You should love to speak about your Father's house.

True it is, that our poor hearts will ever be "cleaving to the dust." There is a weight upon our wings ever keeping us downwards. But, oh, struggle against this. Pray against it. Ask God continually to be drawing your mind heavenward, and to enable you to "set your affection on things above." Speak thankfully of His preserving mercy. Bear testimony to His goodness and faithfulness. And recommend others to trust Him without a doubt, and to give their whole hearts to Him.

6. Try and set a good example to others. We should all wish to be useful in the world. But now that you are grown old, you feel perhaps that your time for usefulness is past.

Satan may whisper, "You are too old to be useful now." But not so; you may do something still. It is true, you cannot labour for your family as you once did. You cannot go here and there to help those who want your assistance. But you may be very useful; yes, useful even now—useful if you are rich, and useful too, if you are poor. As you sit by your fire-side, you may speak Christian words, and you may show by your conduct and temper the blessed effects that religion has upon your heart. You may, by your prayers and praises, by your patience and perseverance, by your watching and waiting, glorify God. A really Christian old man or woman may thus be a great blessing to the house and place in which he is living. He may spread a feeling of contentment around him. He may check many a bad word, and soften down many a quarrelsome spirit. He may show forth so clearly the power of grace in his own conduct, that he may thereby lead others to seek it and pray for it themselves.

Without speaking much, or doing much, you may honour God by your Christian conduct; and thus your light may so shine before men, that they may glorify Him. We know that a nice picture in a room is a pleasant thing to gaze upon; we constantly turn to it with pleasure. And what picture is there more beautiful than that of an aged Christian, old in years, and ripe in grace? "The hoary head is a crown of glory, if it be found in the way of righteousness."

Yes, remember always you may do much by your example. This will tell more even than your words. For your words may be mistaken, but your life cannot be : it must and will speak. St. Paul reminded the Corinthians of this when he said, “Ye are manifestly declared to be the epistles of Christ,” “known and read of all men”—that is, your lives plainly declare whose and what you are.

These are some of the Duties which belong to Old People. Dear reader, neglect them not. Try to fulfil them. It will be for your own happiness, and for the good of others. Thus you will be “bearing fruit in old age.”

CHAPTER IV.

THE TEMPTATIONS OF OLD AGE.

SATAN tempts every one of us. Who is there that has not felt his power? And oh, how craftily does he apply his temptations! He suits them exactly to our stations and ages. He has some temptations for the rich, others for the poor; some for the young, and others for the old. He knows our weak points, and there he assaults us.

So you must not be surprised if you have your temptations, and perhaps sore ones too. You may be one of God's dearest children, and yet be tempted. Was not Joseph tempted, and David, and Paul? And was not even Jesus, the sinless Saviour, tempted by Satan?

Neither, again, be angry with yourself because you are thus tried. It is no sin to be tempted. It is only when we give way to temptation, instead of resisting it, that God is angry with us. It is the falling into sin that grieves and offends Him.

When you find yourself tempted to any wrong feeling, or to do anything sinful, I will tell you what to do. Don't give yourself up to the temptation, but strive resolutely against it. And, as you have but little strength of your own, fly unto God for help. Turn at once to Him. Satan is strong, but there is a Stronger One than he. Jesus knows both Satan's power, and your weakness; and, as "He himself has suffered, being tempted, he is able to succour them that are tempted." In Christ you are safe, and nowhere else. He can throw His shelter around you, and protect you from all harm.

But let us see what kind of Temptations belong especially to the Aged.

A deadness and dulness of soul is very apt to come over an Old Person. Your feelings are not so lively and strong as they once were. Your affections are somewhat blunted. There was a time when a powerful sermon or a striking book moved you, and the tear started in your eye. The love of Jesus made your heart to glow. But perhaps this warmth and tenderness of spirit is in a measure gone.

Now, you have need to be on your guard on this point. Take care that you do not settle down into a cold and easy frame of mind. Take care that your faith does not wither, and your love grow dull. It will do so, if you are not very watchful. Pray constantly that God may touch your heart, and give life to it. Especially pray that you may have a bright view of that gracious Saviour, who has done so much for you.

Very often, too, Old People give way to a peevish and irritable temper. They allow little things to ruffle them and put them out. This is wrong, and it very much interferes with their happiness.

And when you yourself have indulged in this spirit, what has been the consequence? Why, you have felt thoroughly uncomfortable afterwards, and you have wished that you had more command over yourself.

Watch against it then. I know that it is one of the temptations to which Old Age is especially liable. But God can strengthen you against it. He can enable you to overcome it, instead of its overcoming you. He can give you a happy, contented, peaceful frame of mind, and enable you to take all the little roughnesses of life with calmness and evenness of temper. Thus will your latter days be happy, instead of miserable; and you will enjoy a peace within, which nothing can rob you of.

Again, there is such a thing as weariness of life, which it is very wrong to encourage. At the end of sixty or seventy years, a person often feels a little tired of this world. He is weary of its trials. He has tasted of its disappointments. He wishes to get away from them. A suffering body too perhaps weighs him down. And he is ready to cry out with David, "Oh, that I had wings like a dove; then would I fly away, and be at rest."

But this is not a right wish. We ought cheerfully to bear all that our Heavenly Father sees it good for us to bear. Even your greatest sufferings should be willingly endured for His sake. Christ could say in the very midst of His agony, "The cup which my Father hath given me, shall I not drink it?" Elijah was wrong when he requested for himself that he might die, and said, "Now, O Lord, take away my life." Jonah too was wrong when he exclaimed, "It is better for me to die than to live." There was a good deal of discontent in their minds, when they made such a request. It was in a moment of disappointment and distrust that they breathed the prayer.

How different were St. Paul's feelings, when he expressed a “desire to depart.” It was not because he was tired of life—not because he was weary of the lot which God had appointed for him. No; he desired to depart for a far different reason. It was because he wished to be with Christ. He loved his Saviour, and longed to be in His presence.

May God give us the same holy longing! And may we at the same time be content to remain here just so long as He in His wisdom and love sees fit!

My dear Friend, you see there are certain Temptations to which in your old age you are especially liable. I have mentioned three—namely, deadness of soul, peevishness, and unwillingness to bear the sufferings of this life. But there are others, which I have not noticed. Now, look well into your heart, and think what is the temptation to which you are most inclined to yield. And then ask God to set you free from it, and to strengthen you by putting His Holy Spirit within your heart. That was a comforting word which our Lord spoke to Peter, "Satan hath desired to have you, and sift you as wheat; but I have prayed for you, that your faith fail not."

Satan is a mighty Tempter; but you have also an almighty Protector. Rest in His promise; trust in His strength; and no power on earth or in hell can ever harm you.

CHAPTER V.

THE TRIALS OF OLD AGE.

THIS life is a life of trials; and who is there altogether free from them? We must expect them, and be ready to meet them, when they come. Sometimes they cluster so thickly around us, that it needs a stout heart and much grace to bear them meekly, and to pass through them unhurt.

Let us talk over those which belong to Old Age; and perhaps we shall find ourselves all the better for saying a few words about them.

Loss of strength is a great trial to an old man or woman. It is painful to feel that you cannot do many things now, which you once did so easily. To be busy and active was once perhaps your greatest enjoyment. But now your limbs can hardly carry you. Many of the occupations of life are a burden to you.

But let not this distress you. It is your portion, and God has so ordered it. And though "the outer man decays," He can strengthen you in your soul, so that "the inner man is renewed day by day."

And is there not mercy in your very feebleness? For it reminds you constantly that your life is drawing to a close, whilst a voice from heaven whispers to you that "there remaineth a rest for the people of God." In that Heavenly Home there will be no weakness, no weariness, no infirmity, no sin.

Loss of memory is another great trial, which generally accompanies Old Age. I daresay you can remember pretty well what happened years ago, but what happened yesterday you entirely forget. What you read is soon lost; it passes away like letters written on the sand. You hear a sermon, and what your minister said is all gone an hour after; even the very text is forgotten. It maybe, you are sometimes vexed with yourself for this; and you even fear that God may be angry with you. But no; He is no hard master. He "does not reap where He has not sown." He is quite aware of your infirmities. He knows very well the weakness of your frame, and "remembereth that you are but dust." He is too kind, and too just, to require of you what you cannot give Him.

Never mind then the badness of your memory. God will not call you to account for that. The great thing is to have your heart right with God. Entreat Him to cleanse and purify that by His Holy Spirit, and then all will be well.

There is a third loss, which Old Persons often have to mourn over, and that is the loss of Friends. One after another drops off, and they find themselves left behind like a solitary tree in the wilderness. Their dearest children have perhaps been taken from them; and, it may be, a lonely widowhood is their portion. Ah, there is something sad in all this. It is sad indeed to see an aged one bereft of those who once clung to him with fond affection, and now left all alone. But, my dear friend, remember this; you will never be alone

if God is your God. Christ is the Friend, the Brother, the Husband of His people. Others may forsake you; but He never will. You may reckon on His love; it will not fail you. He is with you now, and He will never leave nor forsake you. If you can say, "The Lord is my Shepherd;" then you may add, "Therefore I shall not want."

Again, Old People often feel that they are only a trouble to others. This is a heavy trial to some. But why should it be so? It is the will of God that in infancy and old age we should look to others for help. And surely a son or a daughter ought to feel it not only a sacred duty, but also a pleasure, to supply the wants of an aged parent. And I am sure, where the heart is right, it will be done with real cheerfulness and goodwill.

There is one more trial which I will mention: I mean the feeling of not being able to earn one's own livelihood. If a person has honestly supported himself and his family during a long life, he does not like to feel that he must be beholden to others in his latter days. Perhaps this is the case with you. Perhaps you laid by a pound or two in the days of your strength, and looked forward to maintaining yourself in old age. But you lent your money to a friend, and he has made off with it; or you belonged to a club, and the club is broken up; or you had a long illness, and all your savings were spent during that time; and now you are forced to depend on the kindness of friends, or on parish pay.

Well, if such be the case, you have no cause to blame yourself, and there is no disgrace whatever in being now a pensioner on others. Instead of such a feeling, you may well be thankful that there are ways in which you can be helped in the hour of your need. Look upon those who assist you, as sent by your Heavenly Father. He it is who graciously provides means for supplying your necessities. He raises you up friends. He puts it into their hearts to help you. He is the great Fountain from whence all your blessings flow.

Receive then every gift as from God. Acknowledge His hand in it; and depend on Him from day to day for all you want. I believe that, if we thus trust God, we shall never be disappointed. We may sometimes be driven hard. There may be but a little meal in our barrel, and but a few drops of oil in our cruse; but let us remember that word which comforted Abraham of old, "Jehovah-Jireh"—The Lord will provide. He who feedeth the ravens will feed you. He careth for His people, and will never let them want. "I have been young (said David), and now am old; yet never saw I the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging their bread."

I have mentioned some of your trials. And I daresay there are many more—many which the world knows nothing about, and which none will ever know but yourself. But, however thick they fall around you, and however heavily they press upon you, you have only to carry them to God, and He will lighten your load, and make it easy to bear. Here is your remedy, and a promise with it—"Cast thy burden upon the Lord, and He will sustain thee." He will not only carry your burdens, but He will carry you. He who has often laid you as a lamb in His bosom, will carry you now that you are old. He will never turn away from you, but rejoice over you to do you good. He will be with you amidst all your infirmities. He will not only bring you to Jordan, but will carry you over it, and conduct you safely into the Promised Land.

And then too remember that your trials are good for you. If we had none, we should be like bullocks unaccustomed to the yoke; we should have our own way too much, and never learn submission to our Father's will. Our Lord suffered, and shall not we? It was His daily portion when on earth: let us not wish to escape it.

As it is, we are tied and bound to this world far too much. We love it too well. And how would it be with us if we met with no trials here? We should be still less disposed than we now are to look for another resting-place above.

Think too how light our trials are, compared with the Saviour's. His was a storm of suffering; ours but a few drops. And for how short a time do our troubles, even the severest of them, last! They are "but for a moment." In eternity, how small they will seem to us, as we look back upon them! In heaven we shall thank God for them, for we shall then see how needful they were for us!

Cheer up then, my fellow-Christian! Bear these trials of yours patiently, meekly, thankfully. Look upon them, as the sick man does upon the remedies which are sent to do him good. Look upon them, as the traveller does upon the rough rocks which serve as steps to bring him to his Father's house.

Turn your trials to good account. Let them not be hinderances to you, but helps, on your way to heaven. Ask God to change them into blessings, and to make them useful to you. And just as, when Noah was in the ark, every wave that swelled only bore him up higher and higher towards heaven, so may every trial raise your soul above the world, and bring you nearer and nearer to God!

CHAPTER VI.

THE JOYS OF OLD AGE.

A HAPPY old age! Is such a thing possible? Do we ever meet with an old worn-out person, who is really happy? Is the evening of life ever bright and sunny? Yes, such a thing is quite possible; and we now and then meet with it. Though the body is decayed by time, though the limbs are feeble, and the mind somewhat weakened too, yet still there may be a calm joy within, a peace which time can never wear out.

Dear brother, or sister, do you wish to be happy? I know you do; for every one is a seeker after happiness; though many look for it in the wrong direction, and therefore never find it.

Shall I tell you how and where to find happiness? The world cannot give it to you. It holds out large promises, but it has no peace to bestow. Friends cannot give it to you. It is a blessing to have kind friends, and to be surrounded by those who love us. But this cannot give peace to the conscience. Money cannot give it to you. It is well to have enough, and something to spare. And I dare say, you often long to be a little richer than you now are. But money cannot drive away care. It cannot bring joy to the heart.

What then is it that will make us truly happy? The grace of God is the one great thing which can bring peace to the soul. Oh, what a happiness to know that He is your Father and your Friend—to be able to look up and feel that He is yours, and you are His—this is happiness !

You have sinned—perhaps very long and very greatly. But remember, “God is love.” He is full of mercy, and ready to forgive. He has sent His dear Son to save you. And He will receive every penitent sinner who comes to Him through Christ, looking to His precious blood to save him.

Yes, dear friend, you may be very happy—happier in your old age than you have ever been before. God can give you happiness, and He will give it you if you cast yourself on Him, and take Him as your portion.

Now, go to God, and ask Him to show you your sins, and to pardon them all for Jesus’ sake. Oh seek Him in earnest prayer, and never rest till you have found Him. Pray for the Holy Spirit. Entreat Him to come into your dark soul, and enlighten it. Beseech Him to change your evil heart—to take away all that is wicked in it, and to fill it with what is holy and good. Ask Him to show Christ to you, and to enable you to believe in Him. Ask Him to lead you in that blessed path of holiness, which He points out for His people. Then you will be happy. Here is the grand secret of all peace. Here is rest for the weary soul—joy for those who have never tasted it before.

But there are two or three more hints I should like to offer you.

Try and take a bright view of everything. Look at things on their sunny side. Do not dwell much on your pains and aches, your troubles and infirmities, your trials and misfortunes. They may be very great; but they will not grow lighter by always harping upon them. Rather love to dwell on your many blessings, and your many mercies.

You will say, perhaps, "I cannot help thinking of my troubles." Yes, but you can help it, by making an effort to do so. A dull, complaining spirit grows upon people sometimes without their knowing it. Do try and check it, or it will make your days miserable and displeasing to God.

Determine to be content with your lot, whatever it is. St. Paul says, "I have learnt" (ah, and he found it a good lesson when he had learnt it)—"I have learnt in whatsoever state I am, therewith to be content." A thankful and a contented spirit is a continual feast. We ought to be contented, and we shall be contented, if we are in the habit of seeing God in everything, and living upon Him day by day. Oh for a spirit of true thankfulness!

Oh for a heart to praise the Lord,
A heart from sin set free,
A heart that's sprinkled with the blood
So freely shed for me !

Jane Down was a woman of about sixty-five. She was well off in the world, having a little money of her own. I never went to see her, that she did not find something to complain of. Either her head ached ; or her knee troubled her ; or somebody had been speaking against her ; or the weather was too hot or too cold. You could at once see that she had not found out the secret of true happiness. She was a constant trouble to herself, and a weariness to her friends.

Widow Kingstone lived near her. She was supported partly by her son, and partly by parish pay. But her cottage was as clean and tidy as Jane Down's, though she had not half as many things in it. She was sure to welcome you with a smile, if you went to see her. She was sure to say something pleasant; and you felt afterwards that it did you good to pay her a visit. She had not much of this world's goods; but she possessed Christ. She loved her Saviour, and it was her greatest joy to speak of His goodness. There was a calm peace in that poor widow's heart, which nothing could rob her of. Having Christ, she had all.

What made the difference between these two old people? What made the one contented and happy, while the other was sour, and discontented, and miserable? It was grace that made them to differ. The one was under the influence of the Holy Spirit: the other was destitute of His in-dwelling power. The one knew Christ, and loved Him: to the other He was a Stranger.

Try and live above the world. A ship that is "homeward bound" cares little for the winds and waves, so that it sails on speedily towards the desired harbour. Heaven is the peaceful Harbour you wish to reach. Why then think so much about the storms and tempests, which buffet you on your way? They will soon be over. Face them manfully then. Take them patiently. Bear them meekly. Keep your eye ever fixed on Christ and Eternity. And then the evils of this present world will not greatly trouble you.

Oh that Christ may give you, dear reader, His own peace—that peace which He promised to His people, when He said, "Peace I leave with you: my peace I give unto you: not as the world giveth, give I unto you!"

CHAPTER VII.

THE AGED CHRISTIAN AND HIS BIBLE.

POSSIBLY you may have met with a very nice tract called "The Shepherd of Salisbury Plain." This shepherd was a plain, simple man, with scarcely any learning. But there was one sort of knowledge, of which he had a great deal. And there was one kind of happiness, which he enjoyed more than most men. He was one who feared and loved God, and the Holy Scriptures were his delight. He read them daily, and his soul was greatly refreshed and comforted by them. They were "more to him than his necessary food."

Some were astonished at his knowledge. They wondered how one who had had so little learning could know so much. Where did it come from? How was it, that he, a poor unlettered man, had so much wisdom? He gleaned it all from the Word of God. That Word was brought home to his heart by the Holy Spirit, and it taught him much.

And what has the Word of God done for you? Has it brought light and comfort to your soul? You have a Bible, I dare say, and often read it. But do you enjoy it? Is it precious to your soul? Had you rather give up every other book, than give up your Bible? Is it your constant companion? Do you feel as you read it that it is as if God was speaking by it to your soul?

Two persons may read their Bibles very differently. One may "read down" a chapter or two every day, as regularly as the clock strikes. He may get through a vast deal of Scripture in the course of the year. The Sacred Volume may be often seen in his hand. And yet he may be none the better for his reading. His mind may be as dark as ever, and his hopes of heaven as dim and cloudy. With all his reading, he may never receive God's truth into his soul. He may never know Christ as his Saviour.

Another may study the Bible with far greater profit. He may not be a learned man, or have had much schooling. He may find a difficulty in making out some of the hard words he meets with. But he is a humble man; and so he looks up to God for His teaching. He never opens the Holy Volume without breathing a prayer—a secret silent prayer, it may be, within his own heart—a prayer that the Holy Spirit may open his eyes, and help him to understand and feel the truths he reads. Thus the word falls like seed upon the open furrow. It does not remain on the surface, but sinks down into his very soul. It takes root there. It instructs him. It brings joy and peace to his heart. It makes him "wise unto salvation."

Let the Bible be your constant study. It is God's Word; and it is therefore the best of books. It tells you the way to be saved; therefore it is most precious. It speaks to you of your Saviour and your home; and therefore it should be most sweet to you.

I would recommend you to get a good large Bible with a clear print. And when you have got it, lay great store by it. Do not put it by on the shelf, and be afraid to use it for fear of its getting soiled. But read it very often, so that you may become well acquainted with its blessed truths. And a happy thing it is, if you can say with one of old, "Thy word is sweet to my taste; it is sweeter than honey to my mouth."

I dare say you will find, in the course of your reading, much that you do not understand. Do not let this trouble you. There are many passages in God's Word, which even the most learned find it difficult to explain. God's thoughts are higher than our thoughts, and His ways higher than our ways: so it is no wonder that we cannot understand them.

I have heard of an aged Christian, who was once asked—"How is it that you have so good a knowledge of your Bible?" "Why, this" (she said) "is the plan I always go upon—when I come to a hard verse, or a difficult word, I do not dwell much upon it ; but I put a slip of paper in the page, and then read on. And presently I come to some passage, which explains the one I could not understand. Thus I am able to take out one marker after another. And the consequence is there are but few places which cause me much difficulty."

Try this plan, and I think you will find it answer. There must be difficulties in God's Word ; but Scripture will often explain Scripture. And after all, ought we not to be very thankful that there is so much that we can understand—so much that we can receive for the life and nourishment of our souls ?

One thing is very necessary, and that is to read the Bible with Prayer. Our minds are dark and ignorant, and we want enlightening. Now, even if we had a friend always at our elbow, ready to explain to us every passage, we should still want something more. For man cannot make the blind eye to see. This is God's work. He who commanded the light to shine out of darkness—He who said, "Let there be light, and there was light"—He must shine into our hearts.

Then ask for His enlightening grace. Pray earnestly that the Holy Spirit may come and dwell within you. He is the Teacher that we want; for "who teacheth like him?"

Whenever you open the Bible then, remember to ask God to open your heart. Put up some such short and simple prayer as this—"O Lord, I am blind and ignorant; do Thou enlighten me. Teach me by Thy Holy Spirit; and grant that Thy Word may do my soul good, for Christ's sake."

There are few prayers more fitting for this purpose, than that short but beautiful Collect which we have in our Prayer-books. Let us see that we understand it. "Blessed Lord, who hast caused all Holy Scriptures to be written for our learning"—here we acknowledge that the Scriptures are God's Word, which He has made men to write expressly for our instruction. "Grant that we may in such wise hear them, read, mark, learn, and inwardly digest them"—here is a prayer that we may not only read the words with our eyes, but that we may dwell upon them ; and gather from them something for our good ; and turn them over and over in our minds, just as animals chew the food they eat, in order to digest it. "That by patience and comfort of thy holy Word, we may embrace, and ever hold fast, the blessed hope of everlasting life, which thou hast given us in our Saviour Jesus Christ.” This is the great object of reading God’s Word—that we may get comfort from it, and be enabled to lay fast hold of that everlasting life which Christ has purchased for us.

You see there is a great deal in this Prayer, and it is very suitable to our wants. But it matters not whether you use the Collect I have mentioned, or any other suitable words, so that you earnestly pray for God’s teaching and blessing.

Only read the Bible in a prayerful, humble, childlike spirit, and I am sure you will not read it in vain. You will find there a treasure, which will enrich and comfort your soul day by day.

There was a time when the Bible was a scarce and dear book, so that few could possess it. Now, thank God, it can be purchased by the poorest person, and we may each of us have a copy of it which we can call our own. May we prize it as our dearest possession, and be very thankful to God for giving us so rich a gift!

“ Holy Bible ! Book Divine !
Precious treasure, thou art mine !
Mine, to tell me whence I came ;
Mine, to teach me what I am ;

“ Mine, to chide me when I rove ;
Mine, to show a Saviour’s love ;
Mine art thou, to guide my feet ;
Mine, to judge, condemn, acquit ;

“ Mine, to comfort in distress,
If the Holy Spirit bless ;
Mine, to show by living faith,
Man can triumph over death ;

“ Mine, to tell of joys to come,
And the rebel sinner’s doom.
O thou precious Book Divine !
Precious treasure, thou art mine ! ”

CHAPTER VIII.

THE AGED CHRISTIAN IN THE HOUSE OF GOD.

THE House of God has special charms for the Christian in his Old Age. There is a calm, quiet, soul-refreshing atmosphere there, which is peculiarly sweet to one who longs for rest. You can leave the noise and turmoil of the world, with all its vanities and sins; and there meet your God, and hold sweet intercourse with Him.

The Lord is everywhere. He is "about our path and about our bed." But He is specially with us in His own House. There we feel His nearness, and we are sometimes ready to exclaim as Jacob did at Bethel, "Surely the Lord is in this place; this is none other but the house of God, and this is the gate of heaven."

Good old Eli loved the Lord's House. Many a happy and blessed hour he spent in those sacred courts. David too rejoiced to be there: "A day in thy courts is better than a thousand (spent elsewhere). I had rather be a door-keeper in the house of my God than dwell in the tents of wickedness." Simeon enjoyed his visits to the temple. There it was that he saw the Saviour whom he longed to behold. And this made him quite willing to die: "Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, according to thy Word; for mine eyes have seen thy salvation." We read also in the Gospels of one Anna, who was of a "great age,"

“a widow of about fourscore years, which departed not from the temple, but served God with fastings and prayers night and day.” The House of God was her delight. It seemed like a little heaven below. The voice of prayer and praise was music in her ears.

Well, dear Brother or Sister, I hope you can say of the courts of the Lord, “I love to be there. There I have spent my happiest moments. There I have found a peace, which the world can never rob me of. There I have often had my heart warmed with love to Christ and to His people. There I have oftentimes gone with a heavy burden; but I have left it behind me, and come away lightened.”

“Dear is to me the Sabbath morn,
The village bells, the pastor’s voice;
These oft have found my heart forlorn,
And these have bid that heart rejoice.

“ And dear to me the wingéd hour,
Spent in thy hallowed courts, O Lord;
To feel devotion’s soothing power,
And catch the manna of thy word.

“ And dear to me the loud Amen,
Which echoes through the blest abode,
Which swells, and sinks, and swells again,
Dies on the walls, but lives to God.

“ Oh, when the world, with iron hand,
Would bind me in its six-days’ chain ;
Thus burst, O Lord, the strong man’s band,
And let my spirit loose again.”

But it is not every kind of church-going that does us good. Many a young person, and many an old one too, goes there without getting much profit. Let me offer you then a few friendly directions.

1. Always go to God’s House expecting a blessing. Look out for it, and specially ask for it. Go in a devout spirit. Before you leave your home, kneel down for a moment or two, and beg of the Lord to prepare your heart by His Holy Spirit, and enable you to worship Him as you ought.

2. When there, enter with all your heart into the service. During the Prayers, join earnestly with your fellow-worshippers. It is not enough to sit quietly whilst your Minister sends up his petitions to heaven ; but pray the prayers yourself. Yes, pray them with all your soul.

3. When the Lessons are read out of God's Word, listen with your whole attention. It may be, you have often heard those chapters before, or read them yourself ; but they contain precious truths, which are always new to the hearing ear and the understanding heart.

4. During the Sermon, be a humble listener. You should be as a little child, feeling that your knowledge is but small, and that you have much to learn. You should be like a hungry man who comes to be fed, seeking to get your soul nourished by the bread of life. You should be like the thirsty soil, which waits to drink in the falling shower. If we all heard in this way, who can tell what blessings would flow from every service, and how many would come away from this ordinance of God filled and refreshed?

Perhaps you are growing deaf, and can only pick up a part of what is said by the Preacher. Perhaps too your memory fails you, when you try to gather up what you have heard. Still, you can carry away something; and you will be thankful for that something, if you feel that it is a part of God's own message.

5. Another direction I will give you. When you come home from church, do not forget the service in which you have been engaging.

Converse about it, if you have an opportunity. Get out your Bible, and find the text; and then talk over any parts of the sermon which you can remember. This is the way to refresh your memory, and to lay up a store of spiritual knowledge.

6. When the Holy Communion is administered, do not fail to receive it. Be thankful when your Communion Sundays come round, and rejoice in the opportunity of feeding on the body and blood of Christ.

Some Old Persons "take the Sacrament," as they call it, as a mere matter of form. They come to the Lord's Table, because there is something respectable in doing so, or because their Minister expects to see them there. But if they only come for this reason, it is to them but a poor, cold, dry, unmeaning service; and, instead of pleasing God, they only offend Him.

But I trust that you, my dear Friend, are not one of these formal Communicants. I trust that you come to this blessed ordinance under a deep feeling of your own sinfulness and unworthiness, and desire to draw near to Christ with humble and living faith. You come, not because you are worthy to come, but because you feel your need of strength and grace. You come to Jesus to be pardoned and healed, and to receive fresh life from Him.

I have said that David, and Simeon, and Eli, and Anna loved God's House. But you have reason to love it even more than they did. For they lived only in Jewish days. The light was but very dim then. But now it shines brightly and clearly upon us. Christ is come;

and He is plainly set before us as “the way, the truth, and the life.”

Then love the House of God. Go there as often as the bells of the sanctuary call you. And remember your Saviour’s gracious promise; “Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them.”

May your Sabbaths be more and more happy, as you draw nearer to that endless Sabbath which you hope to spend above! May your love for God’s Day, for God’s House, for God’s Word, and God’s People be ever increasing, till you are called away to join the “one family in heaven,” and sit down with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob in the kingdom of God!

“Thine earthly Sabbaths, Lord, I love,
 But there’s a nobler rest above;
 Oh that I might that rest attain,
 From sin, from sorrow, and from pain!”

CHAPTER IX.

THE AGED CHRISTIAN IN HIS CLOSET.

THERE are times when we must be alone with God. There are times when the Christian wants to get away from others, and draw near to his Heavenly Father. Our Lord knew that this was needful for the well-being of our souls ; and therefore He said, “Thou, when thou prayest, enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father which is in secret.” Jesus, you see, is here speaking of private prayer, when no one is present with us but God Himself.

Think how great your need is, both as regards your body, and your soul. Have you not need of God's protecting care to keep you alive from day to day? Have you not need of His guiding hand to direct you in your path? Have you not need of His grace to keep you from falling into sin, and to strengthen your faith? Have you no bad habits to get rid of, and no bad tempers to subdue? Are there no friends or neighbours, for whom you should intercede? Is there no work of Christ going on in the world, for which you should pray? Surely these are matters, which you have great need to bring before God.

Think too how great are your sins. There are sins, committed long ago in the days of your youth, for which you need pardon. And there are later sins—newly committed perhaps—which lie heavy on your conscience; these too must be forgiven, or you cannot be happy. Oh, how many things there are which we have left undone—how many that we have done wrongly—how many little sins, which we scarcely noticed at the time—how many secret sins which the world knows nothing of! We must carry all these to the Cross, and entreat Christ to wash them away in His own blood.

Think again how great are your mercies. You have cause to thank your Heavenly Father for all His past goodness to you, and for all His present gifts. Oh, how great they are, and how little you have deserved them? Why has He spared you so long? Why are you yet alive, when so many have been cut off? Has He not fed you, and clothed you, all your life long? Has He not preserved you from ten thousand dangers? Has He not shielded you in the hour of temptation? He has, perhaps, kept you from sin, when others have fallen into it.

A clergyman was once visiting an Hospital. And as he went from bed to bed in the different wards, he came to an old man, who was apparently suffering much pain. He began to express his pity for this poor sufferer. "Is there anything, my friend, that you want?" he asked. "No," replied the old man; "I have many mercies and blessings in this place. I want but one thing." "And what is that?" asked the clergyman. "I want," said he, "a more thankful heart."

Yes, we have all of us great needs, great sins, and great mercies. And this should bring us on our knees, and stir us up to prayer.

But, my dear friend, do you know what Prayer, real Prayer, is? It is not the mere utterance of words. It is not the mere moving of the lips. It is not the mere repeating of a string of sentences, which we have learnt by heart. No, this is not Prayer. Prayer is drawing near to our gracious Father, telling Him all about our souls, begging of Him to pardon all our sins, asking Him to give us all we need, and thanking Him for His daily mercies. Prayer is speaking to God, though we cannot see Him.

You need not offer up long prayers. God does not judge of them by their length; but He looks to our earnestness. You need not offer up learned prayers. The sighing of a contrite heart, and the words of a soul that feels, are enough for Him. Perhaps you may find it best to speak to God in your own words, or perhaps you had rather use some prayer which you have learnt. It matters little which, so that your prayer comes from the heart.

Let me now say a word, as to when you should offer up prayer. Certainly morning and evening are the natural times for such a service. I dare say you have always been accustomed to say your prayers then. We should begin and end the day upon our knees. We should do nothing in the morning before we have solemnly put ourselves under God's care; and in the evening one of our last acts should be to visit the throne of grace before we lie down to rest. Yes, these are the two best and properest seasons for regular prayer.

But, dear friend, if you know the value of prayer, you will not be content with your morning and evening devotions. Twelve or fourteen hours are a long while to go without speaking to your heavenly Friend. I would recommend you to have a little time for prayer in the middle of the day. Get a quiet five or ten minutes, if you can, at noon. This was David's custom, and Daniel's; and it is the custom of most of God's people. I strongly advise you to try it, if you have not already done so. When you come to die, you will not feel that you have prayed too much, or too often. Your sorrow will then be, that, although God was always ready to hear you, you were so backward in drawing near to Him.

But does not St. Paul say, "Pray without ceasing?" This, at first sight, seems to be a very hard direction to follow. To be always praying! To be ever on our knees! To be at the throne of grace all the day long! This is more than the holiest men—even Paul himself—could do. What he means, I think, is that we should be always in a praying frame—that we should be ready to go to Him on all occasions—and that there should be a constant intercourse between us and Him.

Try then and act on St. Paul's advice. Besides praying at stated times, get into the way of putting up a word or two to God oftentimes during the day. When you are sitting in your chair, you can lift up your heart to God. When you are walking along the street, you can breathe out a secret petition to your gracious Father. Though you may say nothing aloud, your inward soul may pray. No one may be listening to you ; but God, who heareth in secret, hearkens to your request.

For instance, if you are going to do anything, for which you want strength given you, put up some such words as these, "Lord, help me." If a feeling of your sinfulness comes across you, you may breathe a secret prayer, saying, "Lord, save me." Or if you want to have your Saviour near you, you may dart up some such short request as this, "O Lord, be with me;" "Jesus, make me to feel thy presence."

If you wish to live a heavenly life, this habit will be a great help to you. It will keep you close to God, and will bring down His grace upon you.

My dear reader, if you are a true Christian, you will love prayer; and more especially now that your praying time will soon be over.

You hope to spend eternity with God; oh, then seek to know Him and to love Him now. Let Him be no Stranger to you, but your daily and hourly Companion. If you had a friend near you whom you specially loved, should you not wish often to look upon him? Should you not feel that those moments were the happiest which you spent in his presence, and when he was by your side? Should you not be often speaking to him? I am sure you would. Then act the same with Him who is better than all earthly friends, in whose favour is life, and in whose presence is fulness of joy.

If you wish to be much blessed, pray. If you wish to have a foretaste of heaven even while on earth, pray. If you wish to know, and to love, and to possess Christ, be much in prayer. If you wish to tread safely the path of life, and to go on your way rejoicing, pray. "Pray without ceasing." "In all things by prayer and supplication, with thanksgiving, let your requests be made known unto God."

CHAPTER X.

THE AGED CHRISTIAN READY FOR HIS DEPARTURE.

ONE would think that the longer a person lived, the more willing he would be to leave his present abode. But this is not always the case.

Sometimes, alas! we see very aged persons clinging to life more tightly even than the young. We see them close upon the grave's mouth, and yet loving the riches, the pleasures, the trifles of this world, with all their affections. Oh, this is a sad sight. It is sad to see a poor dying creature entering upon an awful eternity, with a heart glued to the world which he is leaving, and full of its concerns!

When this is the case, God often in mercy sends us some affliction. He withers our gourds which have grown up around us, that He may lead us to seek a truer and a safer shelter. He sees that we are too fond of these clay cottages of ours; so He makes the walls to crumble, that we may be content to leave them at His call.

Look at your growing infirmities, dear reader, as so many mercies. Let them serve to remind you that you will not be here always, and that "this is not your rest." Let them make you long for that happier land, where there shall be no more old age—where sorrow and sighing shall be unknown—and where "the inhabitant shall not say, I am sick." Oh, it is well for us that all is not health, and strength, and sunshine here, else we should be even fonder than we are of our present home. I do not ask you to take a gloomy view of this present world, and to be full of anxiety to quit it. I do not wish you to look upon it as a dungeon, from which you are impatiently longing to escape. No, whilst we are here, we should "use the world" thankfully. We should look upon it, not as our lasting home, but as our appointed dwelling-place for a while. Well is it if we are contented and happy here, and at the same time ever ready for our departure! Well indeed is it, if we can say with St. Paul, as this world closes in upon us, "I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith: and now there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness."

Sit as loose then as you can to this world, and be always in a state of readiness to quit it. Arrange all your worldly concerns. The more cares you have upon your hands, the more will your dying thoughts be disturbed, and your last work interrupted. Our dying moments are solemn ones; and therefore it is very desirable to have nothing then to do but to die.

Above all, let not the work of salvation be left undone. Every funeral you see or hear of, every pain and infirmity you feel, seems to say to you, as Isaiah said to Hezekiah, "Set thy house in order." It is a poor thing to leave to the last the soul's great work. It is often too late to seek a Saviour then. The body will then perhaps be too weak, and the mind too feeble, to begin to seek the Lord. Perhaps too the Saviour, when we most need Him, will then be far off from us. Having rejected Him, He will turn His face away from us, and leave us in that trying hour to ourselves.¹ Oh then “seek the Lord now, while He may be found; call upon Him while He is near.”

There are many old people, who, if you question them about the future, will say that they hope all will be well. But if you press your question a little more closely, you will find that perhaps they have no ground for their hope. They trust that God will be merciful to them; but they cannot say with the Apostle, “I have obtained mercy.” They have never sought it in Christ, where alone it is to be found. They have never fled for refuge to the Saviour. They love Him a little, but they have not given Him their hearts. All is uncertainty with them. This world is slipping from under them; and they have no sure footing on the heavenly shore.

It is a fearful thing to take the last and most important steps of our journey alone and in the dark—not to know where we are going, whether to heaven or hell—not to be sure whether we have the friendship of God or not. Dear friend, it must not be so with you, or your death-bed will be a cheerless one.

Suppose any one was going to take a long journey; he ought to be ready for it. His travelling clothes should be prepared. Nothing should be left unsettled. Everything should be put in order. He ought to know all about the way that he is going to take. He ought to have no misgivings about his journey. His mind should be quite made up.

And should we be less ready for that great and important step which we are all going to take? Our happiness—our eternal safety—depends on it. Oh that we may be able to say, “I die daily;” “The world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world;” “To me to live is Christ: to die is gain.” Live as a stranger and a pilgrim upon earth; daily look forward to your home, and hastening towards it. Live much with Christ now; and then, instead of dreading death, you will heartily welcome it when it comes. You will not look upon it as your foe, but as your friend. It will be to you as the gateway, through which you will pass to your joyful resurrection. You will feel no lingering attachment to the world you are leaving behind you; but you will have “a desire to depart, and to be with Christ, which is far better.”

CHAPTER XI.

THE AGED CHRISTIAN IN DEATH.

DEATH sometimes seizes the young. Sometimes it overtakes a person as he journeys carelessly along the road of life. Sometimes it checks the seed before it springs up. Sometimes it nips the flower as it begins to open to the sun.

But death, whilst it has seized one and another, has hitherto passed you by. You have lived, it may be, your three or fourscore years. But now your turn is coming. The shore of eternity is not far off. You feel that you are drawing near to it.

Perhaps death has sounded its warning note in your ear. Its chariot wheels are drawing near. Your strength is breaking up. Your appetite is gone. Your hearing is thick and dull. Your sight has grown dim. Ah, if this world was your home, it would be but a sad one now. If your only delights were to be found in the world, your lot would indeed be a mournful one; for the world can do but little for you in your present state. It seems to turn its back upon you now.

But brighten up. Your heavenly Father is near. He has blessings for you. He will not leave you in your declining years. "Even to your old age I am He; and even to hoar hairs will I carry you." He is able to strengthen and comfort you in your hours of weakness. He can give you a peace which the world never gave you.

Now, I daresay, you wish to die well. You wish to leave this world with a good hope. Do you not? Then three things are specially needful to make your death-bed a happy one.

1. You must be brought to feel your guilt in God's sight. Many acknowledge this in words; but they do not thoroughly feel it in their hearts. But if the Holy Spirit awakens your soul—if you are really brought under His blessed influence—then you will not speak merely of being a sinner; but you will feel, and that deeply, the burden and guilt of sin. What a difference there is between the cold acknowledgment that you and all the world have sinned, and that deep conviction of sin which leads you to cry out in the agony of your soul, “God be merciful to me a sinner.”

Ask God to make you see what sin is. Pray that the Holy Spirit may show you your guilt, and lead you to sigh and cry for its removal.

“Ah,” you will say, “is this what you mean by happiness on a death-bed? Such thoughts as these will only make me miserable.” There is some truth in this. But, depend upon it, there can be no real happiness until you have felt your misery, and had it removed. Your wound must be probed and laid open, before it can be healed. And is not this a blessed misery, if it leads to happiness? What if sorrow endures for a night, if joy dawns upon us in the morning? It is better to feel your sins now, than to feel them when you are beyond the reach of pardoning mercy. I always think that those are on the fair road to happiness, who have made the discovery that they have wandered and strayed from the right way, and are earnestly seeking to find a better path.

Look closely into your own evil heart. Try and bring every sin from its hiding-place. They lie, some of them, very deep. Pray then, "Search me, O God, and know my heart; try me, and know my thoughts; and see if there be any wicked thing in me, and lead me in the way everlasting."

Remember that there is not a sin which you have ever been guilty of—even though it be years and years ago—that is not written down in God's memory. The sins of your youth, which you may have long since quite forgotten—there they are, as fresh as if they had been just committed. Yes, you have need to ask God to wipe them out of His remembrance, though they will always be fresh in your own. The prayer of David will just suit you, "Remember not the sins of my youth, nor my transgressions: according to thy mercy remember Thou me, for thy goodness' sake, O Lord."

To feel your sins then is important—very important. But something more is needful. You must get them pardoned, blotted out, put away for ever. And how can this be?

2. There is a way by which the guiltiest may obtain forgiveness. There is a Fountain in which the vilest may wash and be clean. The blood of Christ can wipe away our deepest stains. God has sent His Son to die upon the cross; and in that cross you may find mercy.

But perhaps you may fancy that you have no great need of such a Saviour—that you have done nothing particularly wrong—that your heart is as clean as others'—that you have lived a tolerably harmless life, and that God will at last accept you? No, dear Friend, you are a sinner, a great sinner, in God's sight, though man may have nothing to lay to your charge. Oh, how much you have left undone! how much you have done wrongly! How much you have thought about your body—how little about your soul! How much have you cared about this world—how little about that which is coming! How much more have you loved yourself and your children, than you have loved your Lord!

Be assured, your sins are great and many—far greater, and far more, than you can blot out. Go then, and throw yourself on Christ the great Sin-bearer. Bring your debt to Him who has paid it with His blood. Believe on Him. Give your whole heart to Him. Say, "Lord, enable me to love Thee. Make me to taste of Thy preciousness. Look upon me, a vile sinner. Help me in my great need. Pardon all my guilt, and clothe me with Thy perfect righteousness."

3. But further, we need a holy heart. And God must give this. He can take away "the heart of stone," the hard, unbelieving, unloving heart; and can give you "a heart of flesh," a believing, loving, tender heart. Happy those in whom the Holy Spirit dwells, whose souls are filled with His grace, and are daily more and more conformed to the image and likeness of Christ.

And can we ever be perfectly and completely holy here? No, we shall carry about with us a sinful nature to the very last. And our refuge in a dying hour must not be any goodness of our own, but the merits and atonement of Jesus our Saviour.

Perhaps this Book may fall into the hands of one who has been long lying upon a sick-bed. Dear reader, your bed may be a bed of peace; and it will be so, if you have found a Saviour. All is well, if God is your God, and Christ your Saviour. Then you need not fear. He who is your Father keeps you there. You are His prisoner. He has the keys, and in His own good time He will unlock the door, and welcome you into His presence, to be with Him for ever.

Or perhaps your end is near. Happy is it for you, if death and eternity are no strangers to you. Happy for you, if Jesus is your portion, and Heaven your home. Then you have only to die; and death has lost its sting with you. Christ has plucked it out. You can say with the Apostle, "I know whom I have believed." And you can add with David, "When I pass through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil, for thy rod and thy staff they comfort me."

There is now but a step between you and death. And well that it is so, if you are a true servant of God. You have nothing to dread. Death, which is "the king of terrors" to the ungodly, is like a welcome messenger to you. It is like the plank, on which the Sailor walks to shore, after having been tossed on the troubled ocean. It will bear you to your Father's arms. It will lay you in your Saviour's bosom.

Ah, though it is hard to bear weakness and suffering—though days of pain and nights of weariness are appointed you—still you will willingly endure all this, if Christ is with you. If He “makes all your bed in your sickness,” then that bed will be a bed of blessing to you. It is better to lie there, with God for your Friend, than to enjoy health and strength without Him. Your last illness may be a very precious time to you—the most important season of your whole life—the period when you receive the fullest communications from God, and enjoy the truest peace.

When langour and disease invade
This trembling house of clay,
'Tis sweet to look beyond the cage,
And long to fly away.

Sweet to look inward, and attend
The whispers of His love :
Sweet to look upward, to the place
Where Jesus pleads above.

Sweet to look back, and see my name
In life's fair book set down ;
Sweet to look forward, and behold
Eternal joys my own.

Sweet to reflect how grace Divine,
My sins on Jesus laid ;
Sweet to remember that His blood,
My debt of suffering paid.

Sweet in His righteousness to stand,
Which saves from second death ;
Sweet to experience day by day,
His Spirit's guiding breath.

Sweet in His faithfulness to rest,
Where love can never end ;
Sweet on His covenant of grace
For all things to depend.

Sweet, in the confidence of faith,
To trust His firm decrees ;
Sweet, to lie passive in His hands,
And know no will but His.

Sweet to rejoice in lively hope,
That, when my change shall come,
Angels will hover round my bed,
And waft my spirit home.

If such the sweetness of the streams,
What must the fountain be ?
There saints and angels draw their bliss
Immediately from Thee.

Let Christ be your watchword in death, your hope, your joy, your portion, your all. Think of Him, when you can think of nothing else. Cling to Him, when all else is slipping as it were from under you. Be assured, He will never leave you, nor forsake you.

I have read of a dying Christian, a venerable servant of God, whose wife and children stood around his bed weeping. His speech was well nigh gone, and his memory had nearly left him. One of his children had asked him, "Father, do you remember me?" and received no answer. Another and another also, but still no answer. Then his aged Partner drew near. She bends over him; and as tears fall thick upon his face, she says, "Do you not remember me?" A stare: but it is a vacant stare. There is no light in that filmy eye.

The seal of death is upon those lips.
His sun has almost gone down. The shadows of death are upon him.

Then one calmer than the rest, who remembered that the love of Christ is "strong as death," stooped to his ear, and said, "Do you remember Christ?" That name seemed for a moment to call back his consciousness.
His pale countenance lighted up, like the last beam of day; and with a smile
he replied, "Remember Christ! Dear Christ! He is all my salvation, and all my desire."

May this be your feeling and mine in the hour of our departure!

CHAPTER XII.

THE AGED CHRISTIAN IN HEAVEN.

WHAT is Heaven? Where is it? We know not. And there are many more questions we should like to ask about it, but they cannot be answered. This however we know—that Heaven is a holy place, a happy place, an eternal resting-place, the abode of God Himself.

It will be a Holy Place. The Word of God says, “There shall in no wise enter into it anything that defileth.” No unpardoned ones shall be there; no Christless souls; none with unchanged hearts.

This world is under a curse. Sin spoils all our actions. But there will be "no more curse" in heaven. We shall be holy as the angels. We shall be like the Saviour. "Beloved (says St. John), now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that when He shall appear, we shall be like Him."

Heaven will be a Happy Place too. Where there is holiness there must be happiness. When is it that we enjoy the most peace here? Is it not when we are living nearest to God—doing His will, and following Him faithfully? Think then how great will be our bliss in heaven, when we shall be holy as He is holy.

There will be nothing to interfere with our joy then. One would think that our happiness would be spoilt by the absence of some whom we loved here on earth, and who will not be there to share our heaven with us. But no; in some way God will prevent even this from grieving us. So long as He is glorified, we shall be content. Our song will be, "Just and true are thy ways, thou King of saints."

I hope you can feel that you have many happy moments now. But every moment will be happy in heaven. Now it is only chequered happiness; sorrow will creep in. But then it will be perfect and unmixed. Now you feel peace, when you think of Jesus, and what He has done for you; and when your cold heart is warmed with His love, you are happy. But then your heart will be filled full of His love, and your cup of joy will run over.

Heaven is an Everlasting Resting-place. Oh, what a world of toil and trial this is. Perhaps you have had to work hard all your life, and eat your bread with labour. Perhaps you have also lived hard, and often found a difficulty in getting enough. You have met with many a trial too in your day, and this has left its mark on your care-worn brow. But there will be an end of all this in heaven. It has been said, "Earth for toil; heaven for repose." There the weary rest. The tired limbs will ache no more. The tear will not again trickle down your cheek. There will be no more strife and confusion. We shall be no more tossed about on the troublesome waves of this world. All will be rest.

But it will not be a rest of sloth and idleness. There would be no happiness in that. We shall all serve God day and night. The angels serve Him now : it is their greatest joy to be employed for Him. And so it will be with us. To do His will, will be our constant employment, and to sing His praises our great delight. We shall not rest day nor night, saying, “Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty.”

Heaven is the Dwelling-place of God Himself. We shall be with Him. We shall spend eternity in His presence. What an honour ! What blessedness ! If we have any dear friend on earth whom we specially love, are we not very happy in his company ? What will it be to be near our Lord—to see Him, and be with Him, for ever ? “Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and He will dwell with them, and they shall be His people, and God Himself shall be with them.”

This, my dear friend, is the prospect before you. Why should you grieve then that your earthly house is tottering and giving way, when you have such a house as this in store for you? Oh, be of good courage. A few more days in this weary world, and then a Home of joy for ever!

Is this Home yours? I hope it is. Jesus has prepared it for you. But remember, you need to be prepared for it. You need to have every sin washed away in your Saviour's blood. You have an evil, wicked heart; ask God to take it away, and to give you a new and clean heart. Ask the Holy Spirit to teach you, to enlighten you, to show Christ to you, and to make you every day more and more like your Saviour; to bend your will to His.

It is possible that some reader of these pages may have been travelling all his long life TOWARDS HELL. He may have followed his own ways, and despised the ways of God. He may have loved sin, and rejected a Saviour. And now he is come to the brink of eternity ; and all before him is dark and hopeless.

O sinner, I tremble for you. It is written, “ The wicked shall be turned into hell, and all the people that forget God.” “ The wages of sin is death.” What is to become of you ? You will soon die. And what then ? What is there after death ? There is the awful judgment ; “ the great white throne ;” and all gathered before it, and you among the number. The books will be opened, and your sins all written there ! And then the SENTENCE—the just and righteous SENTENCE ! Oh, who shall stand, when He appeareth ? who shall dwell with everlasting burnings ?

Your case is bad, very bad. Shall I say that it is utterly hopeless? No, I dare not say so. I have seen on a dark gloomy day, when almost the whole heavens have been covered with a thick mantle of clouds—I have seen a little speck of light in the distant sky, which has given me hope. And if you open God's Word, you may see a little bright opening of hope ever nigh. There is a whisper from heaven to you, more welcome than the gleam of sunshine, which says, "Come now, and let us reason together, saith the Lord; though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool."

You have greatly sinned. You have done much to shut yourself out from God's mercy. But He has followed you in all your wanderings. He is ready to win you back. He calls to you in words of love and tenderness. Ah, and He seems now once more to hold the door of mercy open. He seems to say to you, "Why will ye die?" He can pardon even now. Think of the cross. Throw yourself down, as it were, before it. Look there for mercy, and you may yet find it.

Yes, my brother, or my sister, you are late, very late; but your day of grace may not yet be past. You may seek Christ, and find Him even now. "To-day, if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts."

But if, on the other hand, you are a true servant of Christ, though you feel yourself unworthy to be called His—if, as you have grown in years, you have gone on loving and serving Him more and more—then you may think of death without alarm—and what is more, you may think of the bright and happy Home Beyond.

Is there not something very sweet in those words, "My Home"? Happy the hardworking Labourer, who, when evening comes, has a home to return to? Happy the Prisoner, who, when his day of liberty arrives, has a home to receive him, Happy the Traveller, who journeys on with the cheering prospect that he is getting nearer home! And still more happy the Christian, whether rich or poor, who, after a long life in this changing world, has a sure and certain hope that he is daily and hourly drawing near to his Heavenly Home!

Here is the sweet and blessed promise—"In my Father's house are many mansions; if it were not so I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you."

“ As when the weary Trav’ller gains
The height of some o’erlooking hill,
His heart revives, if, ’cross the plain,
He sees his home, though distant still.

“ While he surveys the much-loved spot,
He slights the space that lies between ;
His past fatigues are now forgot,
Because his journey’s end is seen.

“ Thus, when the Christian Pilgrim views,
By faith, his mansion in the skies,
The sight his fainting strength renews,
And wings his speed to reach the prize.

“ The thought of home his spirit cheers ;
No more he grieves for troubles past ;
Nor any future trial fears,
So he may safe arrive at last.

“ ‘ ’Tis there,’ he says, ‘ I am to dwell,
‘ With Jesus in the realms of day ;
‘ Then I shall bid my cares farewell,
‘ And He shall wipe my tears away.’

“Jesus, on Thee our hope depends,
To lead us on to thine abode;
Assured our home will make amends
For all our toil while on the road.”

And now, dear reader, it is time that I bid you farewell. If I have said one word that has helped you on your way—if you have learnt a single truth from this book—if I have given a little spur to your faith, or kindled a spark of love in your soul—if, in short, you are in any way the better for having read these pages—to God be all the praise! We shall both give it to Him throughout eternity.

May you and I, unworthy as we are, be numbered among God's blood-bought family—among the Saviour's friends! And may we hereafter sit down together in the kingdom of our Father!

CHAPTER XIII.

PRIVATE PRAYERS.

1.—FOR THE MORNING.

O ALMIGHTY FATHER, look down in mercy upon me Thy sinful creature, who now approach Thee. I dare not come to Thee in my own name, but in the name of Jesus, my beloved Saviour. Hear me, for His sake.

Thou knowest, Lord, how much I have done wrong in the days that are past. I have sinned against Thee in my youth, in my riper years, and even in my old age. Oh, make me to feel my sins. Make me to mourn over them with godly sorrow. Bring them all to my remembrance. Hide nothing from me. Show me my own evil heart.

I thank Thee that Thou hast sent thy dear Son to die upon the cross for me. Pardon me for His sake. Wash away every stain of my guilt in His precious blood.

And, O thou blessed Spirit, make me holy. Be pleased to take away this stony heart of mine, and give me a heart to love Thee. Teach me all that I need to know; especially teach me to know, and to love, and to serve my Saviour.

I thank Thee, O God, for having kept me safely during the past night. Let Thy blessing rest on me this day. Be with me in my going out and coming in, in my sitting down and rising up. Keep me this day from sinful thoughts and evil tempers. Make me contented and happy. May I desire to do Thy will in all things.

May I live, not for this world, but for eternity.

Hear me, O my Father. Bless me, and save me, for Jesus Christ's sake. Amen.

2.—FOR NOON.

O MY God, I come to Thee, for I feel that I cannot live without Thee. Be Thou very near to me, and take up Thy abode within my heart.

Thou knowest how apt I am to forget Thee, and how ready my mind is to wander from Thee. Be pleased to call me back. Draw me upwards towards Thee. My soul cleaveth unto the dust; quicken me according to Thy word.

Blessed be Thy name for having spared me through a long life, and for showing me so many mercies, which I have but little deserved. Be with me during the remainder of my earthly pilgrimage. I have lived long enough to the world and to self; may I now live unto Thee.

Keep me watchful. Keep me prayerful. Keep me humble. Strengthen my poor, weak faith. Kindle some love in my soul. Oh, make me truly thine—thine now, and thine for ever, for Jesus Christ's sake. Amen.

3.—FOR THE EVENING.

O MOST gracious God, I thank Thee that I have been brought safely to the close of another day. Blessed be Thy name for all the mercies which surround me—for the food I eat, and the clothing I put on. Above all, I thank Thee for the still greater mercies which concern my soul. I thank Thee that I have a Saviour, and that He has promised pardon and eternal life to all who believe on Him. Lord, I believe; help Thou mine unbelief.

Blessed Jesus, grant me to love Thee. May my last days be my best days. Grant that I may redeem the time that I have so often wasted, and live henceforth more entirely to Thee.

Prepare me for death. Enable me to look forward to it without alarm. Give me a full and happy trust in Christ my Saviour. As I grow in years, may I each day grow riper for heaven.

Lord, bless my Family, my Neighbours, and Friends. May I be ever trying to be useful to them. Bless all who are kind to me. Be with my Minister, and give him grace to speak words that will do me good.

O my Father, hear me in this my prayer, which I offer up in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.
