

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

WAYSIDE SPRINGS.

THE SONG AT THE WELL.

THERE was once a sermon at a well. The teacher was Jesus of Nazareth, and the discourse was delivered to one poor sinful woman as the entire audience. The Son of God felt (what we ministers too often forget on stormy Sundays) that a single immortal soul is a great audience.

Other wells in the Bible are historic besides the well of Sychar. One, at Bethlehem, is associated with a princely act of chivalry; another, at Nahor, with the beginning of a singular courtship. We venture to say that there is one well beside which most of our readers never halted and out of which they have never drawn either a song or a sermon.

It was situated on the borders of Moab, not far from Mount Pisgah, whose site has lately been identified by our Palestine Exploration Society. It bears the name of Beer, which signifies a well-spring. Up to this spot thirsty Israel came on their journey from Egypt to Canaan. The Lord had just said unto Moses, "Gather the people together, and I will give them water." Here is a promise; but, like most of God's promises, it is coupled with a condition. The condition in this case is that the leaders of the congregation were to dig for the water.

A striking scene unfolds itself. The leaders of the host begin to open the loose sand with the staves which they carried. Moses directs the work, and the earth is thrown out fast. While the digging goes forward the people sing a simple song—one of the oldest snatches of song that has come down to us:

"Spring up, O well! Sing ye unto him!
The princes dug it; the nobles of the people opened it, with the lawgiver's sceptre, with the staves."

Presently the cool water begins to steal in and fill up the cavity. The water bubbles up to music. The plash of the cool liquid mingles with the song of the multitude as they press forward and draw the sweet refreshment for their thirsty tongues. It is an inviting scene and is brimming with spiritual instruction. Many a sweet lesson may we draw from this outgushing well at Beer.

We learn afresh the good old truth that the Lord will provide. It is a grievous sin to doubt God or to limit the Holy One of Israel. He can open rivers in the midst of the desert, and can make the dry land to become springs of water. As long as we remain unbelieving our souls parch up with the dryness. Poor stingy, faithless professors find their religious life little better than a dull march over a very barren Sahara of formalities. There is no joy in their souls and no song on their tongues. As long as Christians neglect duty, and forswear prayer, and disobey God they must expect nothing else than drought and barrenness.

God puts his well-springs of blessing inside the gateway of faith, and our faith is to be proved by our obedience. As soon as Israel believed God enough to dig, and as soon as the staves were thrust into the sand, the waters began to bubble up. The people began to work, and God began to work also. They began to pray also; their prayer took the form of a song. They sang their prayer: "Spring up, O well!" Really the deepest, richest, and devoutest hymns we sing are full of aspiration and petition. They are yearnings towards God and outcries for blessings. That matchless hymn, "Jesus, lover of my soul," is the soul's passionate call upon Jesus to open his bosom of love and let us hide ourselves there. "Nearer, my God, to thee" is a prayer which has floated up on the wings of song from thousands of yearning hearts. "Guide me, O thou great Jehovah!" is another. When a long-thirsting church is beginning to arouse into a revival, its hymns begin to become fervent soul-cries for the power from on high. Such song is irrepressible. The soul bursts into it. Petition mingles with praise, and the heart's deepest wants are blended with the heart's fullest gratitude. While we are digging for the water and praying for the water, we are singing for thankfulness that the water begins to flow. This complex idea runs through all of David's richest Psalms. They are blended prayer and praise.

This triple process belongs to every Christian's best labors and sweetest joys. He yearns after Jesus, and after a fuller tasting of Jesus' love, and after a fuller enduement with the Spirit. With his hands he is digging, but with his lips he is singing. Duty is no longer drudgery; it is delight. Witness, all ye beloved brethren who have experienced the richest joys of revival seasons, has not preaching the Word, and praying for the conversion of sinners, and honest work for the Master been a spiritual luxury? As you plied the staves and the waters of salvation gushed out, you have taken out Israel's strain, "Spring up, O well. Sing ye unto him."

That gathering at the fountain of Beer was a primitive praise-meeting. We should have many such in our churches, and if we were filled with the Spirit we would multiply our "sacrifices of praise." The more the blessings the more the joys, and the more the joys the more the music. While Israel continued to murmur against God they were parched with drought. When they began to work and to pray and to sing, the fountain burst forth. An ounce of song is worth a ton of scolding. As a group of sailors on the deck, when they pull with a will, always pull to the cadence of a song, so God's people will always pull with more harmony and strength when they join in the voice of praise. "Whoso offereth praise glorifieth Me." God never loves to hear us murmur or scold or revile each other. He loveth the prayer of faith and the upspringing of joyful praise. It was not only Paul's prayer, but Paul's midnight song of praise, that shook open the old dungeon at Philippi.

One other thought must not be forgotten as we stand by that well of Beer. Those inflowing waters are a beautiful type of the Holy Spirit.

As the previous scene of the uplifted brazen serpent is a type of the atoning Saviour, so the fountain of Beer is a symbol of the influences of the Spirit. Christ himself employed the same emblem, as we read in the seventh chapter of John's Gospel. When the divine Spirit flows into our souls, then come refreshment, peace, strength, holiness, and the sweetest, purest of all joys. Then we work for Christ with elastic hope. Then we see the fruits of our toil springing up like Beer's bursting well. Then we have the new song put into our mouths, and our hearts make melody. Life becomes an antepast of heaven. We are becoming attuned for those hallelujahs which we shall sing with rapturous sweetness beside that crystal stream which floweth out of the throne of God and of the Lamb.

CHRIST THE FOUNTAIN.

“IF any man thirst, let him come to Me and drink !” This was an astonishing announcement. If Plato had uttered it from his Academy, it would have savored of boastful presumption. Yet a Galilean peasant, whose whole “school” of followers scarcely went beyond a dozen fishermen and publicans, makes this proclamation to all human kind : “If any one is thirsty for pure happiness, I will satisfy him ; if any one is suffering from a sense of guilt, I will relieve him ; if any one is heart-broken, I will comfort him.” There is no alternative. Either this carpenter’s son from Galilee is an insane impostor, or else he is a being clothed with divine power. No madman ever talked for three years without uttering one foolish syllable ; no impostor ever pushed himself before the public eye for three years without doing one selfish act.

Jesus of Nazareth, then, was what he claimed to be—the Son of God.

He does not draw from others his supplies for human needs ; he invites everybody to come and draw from him. He is not a reservoir filled up from some other sources and liable to be exhausted ; he is an original, self-supplied FOUNTAIN-HEAD. Never had the face of humanity been more parched and dusty and barren than was that Oriental world when Jesus burst up through it like an artesian well. Even Judaism had become like a desert, and lo ! there breaks forth this gushing fountain of crystal waters. He is more than a teacher, giving instruction on all profound and practical questions. He is more than a miracle-worker, giving sight to the blind, ears to the deaf, and healing to the diseased. His supreme gift to man is himself. From himself flows forth the recovering influence ; from the inexhaustible depths of his own being, as “very God of very God,” a whole thirsty race may draw refreshment. “The water that I give shall be in you a well of water springing up into everlasting life." It is not simply profound truths that Jesus offers, or a system of doctrine, or a beautiful model of right living. He offers himself as the satisfier : Drink me, take me into your souls, and ye will never die of thirst.

What a thirsty crowd fills all the thoroughfares of life ! Quacks cry their nostrums on every hand. Ambition sets up its dizzy ladder and proclaims : If any man thirst for happiness, let him come hither and climb. Mammon puts up over the doors to his temples of traffic : If any man thirst, let him come to me and get rich. Pleasure lights her saloons and strings her viols and sets out her flagons and cries aloud to the passers-by : If any are wretched and thirst for enjoyment, let them turn in hither and drink. And all these are but miserable, broken cisterns, that hold no water. In every human soul is a crying want, a hunger that such husks cannot feed, a thirst that grows the keener the longer it is trifled with. My soul recognizes sin and thirsts for relief from it. I am so weak that I have been overthrown again and again ; I want strength equal to the conflict. My earthly sources of happiness are precarious. Death has already shattered more than one beautiful pitcher at my domestic fountain. God has put within me desires and demands that no uncertain rivulet can satisfy. My soul thirsts for the living Christ! When he opens up the well-spring within me, peace flows like a river. Pure motives well forth, desires after holiness, and love in its satisfying fullness. Conscience is kept clean and sweet by the presence of Christ, the fountain-head.

This fountain never dries up. It is never frozen over. No sediment defiles it. Every good thing that I ever sought for outside of Jesus Christ has had its defects, and the very best has brought a shade of disappointment. But whenever I got a deep draught of Christ's wonderful words, they were like Jonathan's honeycomb, they "enlightened my eyes." Whenever I have swallowed his promises, they have acted on me as Professor Tyndall says the canteen of fresh Swiss milk acted on him before he commenced the ascent of the Weissshorn—it lubricated his joints and put new strength into every muscle for the hard climb.

But we must drink from the fountain, if we would receive strength, joy, and life. The proclamation is not, Come to the Bible and read; or, Come to the church and listen; or, Come to the altar and pray; or, Come to the font and be baptized; or, Come to the sacramental table and partake. It is, "Come unto ME and drink." This is a voluntary act, so simple that a babe understands it by instinct. On a hot summer day we dip the vessel into the cool spring, and, as its delicious draught passes into the lips and through the whole system, an exquisite refreshment steals through every nerve and fibre of the frame. So doth faith take in Christ, and his grace reaches every faculty and affection of the soul.

Coleridge said that the best proof of the inspiration of God's Word was that "it is the only book in the world that finds me at every point of my nature." The best argument for Jesus Christ is that he alone satisfies me. His grace goes to the right spot. His comfort soothes the sore place ; his atoning blood makes me sure of pardon ; his love cures my wretched selfishness as nothing else can do it ; of almost every one and everything else we can get tired, but what true child of Christ ever got tired of the water of life ? With joy doth he ever draw water from this well of salvation.

Yet tens of thousands around us are perishing, not from the want of the life-giving water, but because their foolish, depraved hearts do not thirst for it. A lady who visited one of the tropical islands for health, wrote home to her friends, "This is a lovely spot. I have every kindness, and abundance of food and fruits and luxuries, but I have no appetite. If I could only get an appetite I would soon recover." Alas, within a month she was gone ! She died, not from want of food, but from want of hunger ; not for lack of refreshing drinks, but from the lack of thirst for them. So it is the worst symptom of sin in the human soul that it kills the appetite for holiness. We crave other sources of enjoyment than Christ offers. Drugged with the devil's treacherous draughts, we cry constantly for more, and yet refuse to touch the water of life everlasting. Blessed are they that thirst after purity and pardon and peace and power; for in Christ they may be filled.

These words are written for those who are thirsty. Ye who have a real aspiration for a nobler and purer life, ye who have never yet been delivered from the plague and power of sin, listen to that celestial voice: "If any man thirst, let him come to me and drink!" There is a flock at the fountain now. Go and join them. Draw for yourself. Drink for yourself. Drink, that your joy may be full. In heaven there is a perpetual Thanksgiving Day; for the Lamb who is in the midst of the throne is their Shepherd, and he leadeth them to ever new fountains of waters of life.

THE GREAT PROMISE.

MANY of the sorest sorrows in this world are caused by broken promises. Oft and again the tradesman is brought to embarrassment or even bankruptcy, because the promissory notes which he held proved to be worthless. How many a home is shadowed by the sins of violated vows; hearts are broken by the broken promises of wedlock. "Till death us do part" is the solemn engagement fluently spoken, but it is the "death" of affection or of moral character that brings the real parting.

While human promises are so often broken by either wilfulness or weakness, it is a glorious thought that there is one Faithful Promiser whose word is surer than the everlasting hills. Sometimes his providence seems to be contradicting his promises, as when he assured Paul of the safety of all on board the corn-ship; but all in good time the shipwrecked crew and passengers escape safe to land on the broken pieces of the ship. We are often too hasty in judging our Heavenly Father, and as often mistake what he has agreed to give us. He never agrees to give us wealth or health, or freedom from care or sharp affliction. But "this is the promise that he hath promised us, even ETERNAL LIFE." A great deal more than deliverance from the condemnation of sin is signified by this word "life:" it is the inbreathing of a new principle by the Holy Spirit; it is the vital organic union of the soul to the Son of God. Because he lives, we shall live also. Our whole spiritual nature is elevated, ennobled, purified, and strengthened by having this Christ-life infused. We do not lose our individuality or our responsibility to do our utmost in watchfulness or in work. The disciples on Galilee in the night-storm must all pull at the oars, even though Jesus was on board both as pilot and preserver. Christ's almighty grace bestows the new life, and maintains it, and most lovingly aids it; but after all, you and I must do the living. If we have only a gasping, feeble, fruitless life when he offers to give it "more abundantly," then it is our own criminal fault. We must work out our own salvation, even while he is working in us and upon us.

The real grandeur of this grand promise is that Jesus guarantees never to desert us. "My grace is sufficient for you" means all that it asserts. "No man shall be able to pluck you out of my hands" means that the hand that holds is omnipotent; all our concern must be to stay in that hand. We are kept by the power of God, through faith, unto salvation. A young minister, while visiting the cabin of a veteran Scotch woman who had grown ripe in experience, said to her, "Nannie, what if, after all your prayers and watching and waiting, God should suffer your soul to be eternally lost?" Looking at the youthful tyro in divinity, she replied, "Ae, dearie me, is that a' the length ye hae got to, my mon? God, let me tell ye, would hae the greatest loss. Poor Nannie wad only lose her soul, and that wad be a great loss; but God wad lose his honor and his character. If he brak his word, he wad mak himself a liar, and a' the universe wad gae to ruin."

The veteran believer was right. Our only real ground of salvation lies in God's everlasting word. This is the promise which he hath promised; let us cleave to that. If the title-deed to my house is safely lodged in the register's office of Brooklyn, why should I lie awake at night for fear of ejectment from the premises? It is my business to continue in the house, and it is the city's business to keep secure my title to it. Just two things are essential to a Christian's hope of salvation. The first one is that he must be sure that he is alive—and life is self-evidencing. A corpse never breathes or answers questions. As long as you really breathe out honest penitence and desires after God, as long as you feel any degree of genuine love to Jesus, as long as your lips move in sincere prayer and your hands move in obedience to Christ's commandment, you are not a corpse; you are alive. The life may be too languid and feeble, but it is there.

Make sure of that by honest self-searching, and by a comparison of yourself with what Christ demands. When your state corresponds to the Christian's state, as described in the Bible, you have the witness of the Spirit that you are his. Having this actual life, strive to have it more abundantly; the more you have, the richer, purer, stronger, and more useful you become.

Being assured that we are born again and are living to-day, the other essential is from God, and belongs exclusively to him. You and I have nothing to do with it. God will take care of his own promises. If he said, "He that believeth hath everlasting life," you have nothing to do except believe and obey. Last year I sat at eventide on the battlements of the castellated convent of Mar Saba, and looked down into the deep gorge of the Kidron. All night I lay secure in the strong fortress while the jackals howled and the Bedouin prowled without. So may every child of God who has lodged himself in the stronghold of the divine promise rest securely, and let the devil's jackals howl as loudly as they choose, or the adversary lie in wait outside the solid gateway. "This is the promise that He hath promised us, even eternal life." Cleave to that! As long as we trust God in Christ, and attest our faith by our conduct, we may roll the responsibility of our salvation upon God himself.

But will this life outlast the grave? Will it reach across that great mysterious chasm that separates us from the unseen world? Will it be eternal? These are the questions which sometimes torment the survivors when they have gone down to the shore of the unbridged river, and watched a beloved child or husband or wife disappear slowly out of sight. "Can I feel sure that there is a heaven for that loved one to land in?" But nobody comes back from that other world, nobody ever will come back, to bring a single syllable of assurance. The boats on that river of death all head one way; there are no "return trips."

Suppose that one should come back and tell us that he had actually found a heaven, and entered it, and participated in its splendors and joys. If we believed the statement, it would have to be on a single human authority. But if we would believe the witness of a man, is not the witness of the Almighty God infinitely greater? If we are only to feel sure of a heaven on the testimony of somebody coming back to each one of us, then would we consent to exercise a faith that glorifies a worm of the dust and dishonors the God of the universe. For one, I would rather trust a single word of divine promise, than a million of human assertions. Just open to the first chapter of that epistle which the Holy Spirit wrote by Peter's hand, and read the third, fourth, and fifth verses. If you, as a follower of Christ, do not feel sure of an "inheritance reserved for you," then you would not believe though an army of saints came back from the skies. Then trust God! Let your faith be —"the living power from heaven

That grasps the promise God has given;
Securely fixed on Christ alone,
Your trust shall ne'er be overthrown."

PATCHING THE OLD GARMENT.

SOME of our Lord's parables are to be weighed rather than measured. Brief as to space, they are most profound and practical in their significance. In a single verse is compressed the following parable: "No man seweth a piece of new cloth on an old garment; else the new piece that filled it up taketh away (or teareth away) from the old, and the rent is made worse."

No sensible man would patch an old, threadbare, out-worn garment with a piece of undressed and unfulled cloth, and for two good reasons: the ill-matched patch would make an ugly appearance, and the strong cloth would soon tear out from the weak, rotten fabric, and the whole process would end in failure. By this pithy parable the Great Teacher taught that the old dispensation of ceremonial observances had had its day and become obsolete. His gospel was a new system of religious faith and methods, entirely complete and adequate for all persons and all time. Any attempt to engraft it upon the out-worn system of Judaism would be abortive. The new faith was to be embodied in renovated forms of speech and forms of service.

This parable has a very practical bearing upon the vital point of character, and the vital process of conversion. Hardly any simile describes character better than that of a fabric, made up of innumerable threads, and put together by numberless stitches. The earliest stitches are commonly put in by a mother's hand; the subsequent work of Sunday-school teachers and pastors may do much in the making or the marring of the fabric. A great many poor, sleazy fabrics have a smooth and substantial look, but in the wear of life they betray the weak spots and ravel out. Some people also are not stoutly sewed; they are only basted. When the warp and woof of character is weak and worthless, when it is badly rotted by sin, there are two methods of repair: the one is to patch up the old; the other is to discard it altogether and procure an entirely new fabric. The first is man's plan; the second is Christ's plan. The fatal objection to the first method is that a patched character does not look well and will not last. Harmony is a prime essential of beauty, and a bright strip of virtue pieced in upon a godless life only makes the rest of the fabric look more unsightly. Nor is there strength enough in the fabric to hold the incongruous patch.

We ministers make a sad mistake when we direct our main efforts against particular sins, instead of striking at the source of all sins, a godless, unrenewed heart. Make the tree good, and the fruit will be good. Many a drunkard, disgusted and horrified by his own loathsome vice, has made a solemn resolution to break off his evil practice, but has not gone the whole length of seeking a new heart and the mighty help of God. He has attempted to patch a new habit on an old unregenerate heart. Even his temperance pledge may soon tear out and the rent be made worse. Such men as John B. Gough and Mr. Sawyer testify that what the inebriate needs is the new fabric wrought by the almighty power of the Holy Spirit. So with all kindred sins of falsehood, Sabbath-breaking, lechery, covetousness, and the like. A man may be shamed out of certain public acts of Sabbath desecration, and yet hide away a Sabbathless heart in his own house, and spend the day in utter defiance of God. An eloquent appeal may wring a contribution out of a stingy soul; but he will lock his purse the tighter the next time, and confirm his covetousness. What he needs is the melting power of a new affection; if he does not give from a right motive, he is none the better for having his money extorted from him. Barnabas gave his land to the Christian church because he had first given his heart to Jesus. In all my long ministry I have never been able to patch up a sinner so that he will look and act like a genuine Christian.

Christ's method of dealing with human character is the only thorough and successful method. He says, "Behold, I make all things new." If any man be in Christ, and Christ in him, he is a new creature. The rotten garment has been discarded, and the complete righteousness has been put on so that the shame of his nakedness might be hid. How sharply Jesus clove to the core of the matter with Nicodemus ! He does not tell the inquiring Pharisee to go home and reform certain bad habits, but "thou must be born again." The young ruler was able to display some very bright patches of virtue, and expected to be praised for them; but when the Saviour offered him the entirely new garment that cost self-denial, and yet would pass him into heaven, the poor fellow went away with his old patched robe disappointed and sorrowful. God has ordained this principle: that no pardon of sin and no spiritual blessing can ever be obtained except through an inward acceptance of Christ, and an entire regeneration by the Holy Spirit. The supreme gift of the Lord Jesus is a new character. The apostles never wasted a moment on a gospel of patchwork. Their twofold text was, "Turn to the Lord," which meant repentance, and "Cleave to the Lord," which meant a life of faith and holiness.

It is quite in line with this idea of spiritual clothing that the apostle exhorts every one to "put on the Lord Jesus Christ." That signifies the entire inwrapping and infolding of ourselves in the holy texture of his perfect righteousness and all-sufficient grace. We walk inside of our clothes. So a consistent Christian walks inside of the beautiful garment which Christ has woven for him and wrapped about him. Bear in mind that it is a "seamless robe" which the dear Master provides for us; we must have it all or none. How warm it is in its ample protection against all weathers! How beautiful it is when washed white in the blood of the Lamb! How well it wears! I have seen it look brighter than new after fifty years of hard service, and in heaven that wedding-garment will make even a pauper to shine like an angel of light.

With such a beauty of holiness offered to us, why should so many professors of religion be content to be only a bit of shreds and patches? Certainly no unconverted worldling is ever so charmed by them as to come and say to them, “Where did you find that? I want something just like it.” Inconsistent Christians simply disgust the people of the world, and lead them to say, “If that be Christianity, I don’t want it; my coat is as good as that, and better.” A poor fabric is made none the better by the patchwork of public prayers or professions. A reconversion, a new heart-work, and a renovation of the very warp and woof of character, is what God requireth. And what a new power and beauty and irresistible influence would go forth from all our churches if we were all freshly clad in Christ Jesus!

“This spotless robe the same appears
When ruined nature sinks in years.
No age can change its glorious hue;
The robe of Christ is ever new.”

A GOOD LIFE—HOW TO BEGIN IT.

SOME persons who honestly desire to begin a better life are puzzled about the first steps. They imagine that some intense excitement, either within themselves, or around them in the form of a "revival," may be indispensable. This is a grievous mistake. Many a genuine conversion has been attended by the anguish of a pungent conviction of sin, and the joy of a sudden relief and inlet of peace; but we doubt whether one-half of the sincerest Christians have had precisely this experience. For any one to wait for such an experience is folly; for any one to demand it from God is insane presumption.

There is one case of conversion mentioned in the New Testament which affords a beautiful illustration of the right way to begin a good, honest, useful Christian life. The man himself was not a genius, and his spiritual change had nothing dramatic or "sensational" about it. He belonged to a very odious class—the tax-collectors of Palestine. The average Jew regarded the publican who wrung out of him tribute for Cæsar very much as the average "Land-Leaguer" in Ireland has regarded the British Ministry. The Jew never paid his tax without a grudge and a growl; if the publican himself were a Jew, he was excluded from the temple and from all social intercourse with his countrymen.

Our Lord, in the course of his walk from Capernaum to the country, came across one of these detested publicans sitting at the place of toll. The toll-booth was a sort of Oriental custom-house; not a permanent building, but a shed or arbor by the roadside. The collector of taxes who sat at the booth was a Jew named Levi; he is elsewhere called Matthew—a name which signifies "the gift of God." Jesus was probably no stranger to him, for every well-informed man must already have heard of the wonderful prophet from Nazareth whose words and works were the talk of all Galilee.

Christ approaches the publican kindly, and addresses to him that short, simple sentence which seems to have been his frequent formula of invitation. He just said to Levi, "Follow me." That is precisely what he says to every immortal soul through his Gospel of Love. Christ wanted Levi—or Matthew—and Matthew needed him. Those two brief, pithy words changed the whole career of the publican; they killed the old covetous self, and gave birth to a new and noble character. We are told that Matthew "left all, rose up, and followed" Jesus. There was no outbreak of compunction that we read of; certainly there was no dallying or delay. He saw his duty; he did it.

Now what did the publican leave? Not his property, for he soon after gave our Lord a hospitable entertainment in his house. He left his old and odious business; he left his spiritual errors and blindness; he left his worldly aim and his wicked heart behind. He found a new calling; he found peace of conscience; he found a field of amazing usefulness (as a disciple and afterwards as an inspired evangelist); he found a Friend—and finally an everlasting inheritance among the crowned ones in the New Jerusalem.

Here is a model for you, my friend, if you are willing to yield to the Holy Spirit, and to begin a new style of acting and living. Can you make a wiser choice than Matthew made? He was a plain, every-day man, busy at his offensive line of work. By no means an extraordinary personage like Saul of Tarsus, and by no means awakened by a lightning-flash like the brilliant and bloody persecutor. He did not wait for a Pentecost, nor for any external pressure of excitement. Neither should you. Under the influence of a strong call from the Lord Jesus himself, he decided. So can you. There was entire free agency. Matthew was moved by the divine love that appealed to him; his reason and conscience were convinced; his heart was in the step when he rose up and followed the divine Teacher from Nazareth.

Nothing but your own stubborn, selfish, sinful will has kept you so long from accepting the precious gift of eternal life. All the surrender that has been required of you is to give up what is wrong. All the duty that is required of you is to do what is right. You must abandon your besetting sins, and do so voluntarily. This may cost you some struggle and self-denial, but God will help you through. The publican "rose up" without losing any time, or tampering with the loving invitation. It was now or never. Even so must your acceptance of Christ be prompt, and your obedience be sincere and practical. Matthew did the very first thing that Jesus bade him do. Are you ready to do as much? If not, you are rejecting Christ, and throwing away all hope of a better, purer, safer, and holier life.

The chief thing, observe, that the publican did was to follow Jesus. He did not dictate, or mark out a course for himself, or insist on having his own way. He chose to go in Christ's way, and precisely so must it be with you if you would be a Christian in this world, and have the Christian's home in the next world. Christ goes before you; follow him. He gives you his illuminating Word; study and obey it. He offers you a line of usefulness; enter it. If he demands of you a cross, you may so bear it as to make it a crown. Do not linger, I implore you. Death will soon find you, and cut you down in your guilt; your last chance will be gone! Up to that hour at the toll-booth Matthew's life was chaff; thenceforth it was precious wheat. Your life without Christ is chaff for the flames of perdition. Listen to Jesus; obey him; follow him; and you may open a new life whose golden grain will be a part of the glorious harvest of heaven.

BE THOROUGH.

THE bravest man of his time in Jerusalem stood up in the temple gateway, on a public occasion, and delivered a very short but a very searching sermon. It was a model of plain, pungent preaching. He did not utter any message evolved from his own brain; he gave them God's message. It ran on this wise: "All ye people of Judah, if ye will thoroughly amend your ways and your doings, then will I cause you to dwell in this place, in the land that I gave to your fathers." The moral condition of the people had become deplorable. The command to them is, thorough reform of character and conduct. A rich promise is made to them if they obey; if they remain wedded to their sins, their temple and their homes would be left to them desolate.

Jeremiah's pithy address to his countrymen is a capital text for our times. Wherever churches are following the "Week of Prayer" with special religious services for the conversion of souls, pastors cannot go amiss in using it. President Finney, in the days of his greatest power, used to take such passages as this to drive them like a plough beam-deep through the consciences of his auditors. So he broke up the fallow ground and got it ready for the seed of the gospel. He believed in thorough work, in a thorough exposure of the wickedness of human hearts, in a thorough conviction of sin, in a thorough reformation of character under the mighty workings of the renewing Holy Spirit.

The fatal mistake of many people is that they seek for a cheap religion. Some preachers and teachers, in their desire to recommend the glorious freeness of the gospel and the simplicity of faith, hold out the idea that it is the "easiest thing in the world to become a Christian." They hold up very attractively summer-religion, which is all clear weather and sunshine, and Christianity as a sort of close-covered carriage, in which one can ride for nothing and be safely landed, without too many jolts, at the gateway of heaven. Very little allowance is made by these rose-water teachers for the stubborn depravity of the human heart, for the tremendous power of the adversary, and for the poisonous atmosphere through which one must fight his way to the "prize of the high calling." Grand old Samuel Rutherford, in his nervous, incisive way, says, "Many people only play with Christianity, and take Christ for almost nothing. I pray you to make your soul sure of salvation, and make the seeking of heaven your daily work. If ye never had a sick night and a pained soul for sin, ye have not yet lighted upon Christ. Look to the right marks; if ye love him better than the world, and would quit all the world for him, then that proveth that the work is sound." Probably no writer has ever combined the richest, sweetest ecstasies of devotion with a more pungent exhibition of the plainest rules of everyday morality.

The first step towards a genuine, abiding Christian character is repentance of sin. John

Baptist made this the keynote of his ministry, which was a preparatory work for the Messiah, just at the door. Jesus himself struck the same note. Matthew tells us that "from that time Jesus began to preach, and to say, Repent!" When the apostle Peter delivered that Pentecostal discourse which pricked into three thousand hearts, and they cried out, "What shall we do?" his prompt answer was, "Repent!" There is a logical necessity in this; for no man can cleave to his sins and lay hold of Christ with the same hand. No man can turn to the Lord until he has turned his back upon his evil practices and is willing to thoroughly amend his ways and his doings. Our beloved brother Moody, indeed, once declared that he had had far more success when he has preached Christ's goodness than when he has preached upon repentance; and this reveals the only weak point we have ever discovered in the methods of this most popular and powerful preacher of the Word. An immediate and temporary "success" may be gained by inducing a person to rise up and declare that he believes in so lovable a being as Christ Jesus, and yet that same person may soon drift back under the dominion of the sins which he had never intelligently abandoned. We doubt whether any person ever lays thorough hold on the Saviour until he feels the need of one who can save him from his sins. Certainly no one in that death-trap of a hotel in Milwaukee even dreamed of flying to the fire-escapes until he was aroused to the dangers from the crackling flames. Why should any man betake himself to a Saviour, if he does not realize that he needs one, and that there is an abominable and deadly evil in his own heart and life that he must be saved from?

When David's eyes had been opened to behold the loathsome depravity of his own conduct, he asks for no compromise, but cries out, "Wash me thoroughly from my iniquity." He was ready to be thrown, like a filthy garment, into the caustic alkalies, to be rubbed and mauled and beaten until the black spots were cleansed away from the fabric. Such an abhorrence of sin it is the office of the Holy Spirit to produce; therefore should we pray for the Spirit. Such a view of his guilt it is the office of the minister to bring before every unconverted man ; therefore should the minister hold up the exceeding sinfulness of sin. The clearer the view of sin, the more thorough is likely to be the repentance. "Ye must be born again," said the Master to his anxious inquirer, Nicodemus. But the new birth, or regeneration, is the production of a new principle in us, which is antagonistic to sin as well as obedient to God.

The only evidence of repentance is thorough reformation. This takes hold both upon character and conduct; character as what we are, and conduct as what we do. This amendment must be thorough and go to the roots, or it will be as evanescent as the morning dew. The shallow "conversions" that are so often trumpeted as the result of shallow, sensational preaching, end in very shallow and short-lived religion. That dark and dismal fount-head of the heart is not purified by the Spirit, and pretty soon the foul streams begin to trickle out again into the daily conduct. Bad habits are not pulled up. The sharp practices are soon resumed in business transactions, or the young man soon drifts back into his convivial haunts; the unconquered bad temper begins to take fire and explode again; the covetous spirit gets hold again with a fresh grip; in short, the new emotion passes away, but it does not leave a new man. Christ has no hand in such conversions. They are a delusion, often an unmeasured curse. When Jesus is presented and pressed upon a sinner's acceptance, he must be presented as not only infinitely beautiful, tender, compassionate, and lovable, but as so infinitely holy that his eyes flash flame through everything wrong. The very bitterness of his sacrificial sufferings for us on the cross arose from the bitterness of the sin he died to atone.

One thought more. Genuine conversion demands thorough amendment of conduct, and no exception must be made for what we call little sins. It is not every one who is sunk, like the "City of Brussels," by one tremendous hole stoven through in an instant; small leaks, left un-stopped, are equally fatal. Maclaren well says that "the worst and most fatal are often those small continuous vices which root underneath and honeycomb the soul. Many a man who thinks himself a Christian is in more danger from the daily commission, for example, of small pieces of sharp practice in his business, than ever King David was at his worst. White ants pick a carcass clean sooner than a lion will."

There is a transcendent promise that accompanies such thorough amendment of character and life. "I will let you dwell in this place." This bespeaks peace and permanence under the benignant smile of God. This means room to root and to grow. A soul that is rooted into Christ will thrive like a tree planted by the rivers of water; the leaves shall never wither, and death will be only a transplanting into glory.

CHRIST'S JEWELS.

THE Lord Jesus when on earth was one of the poorest of men. He was born to poverty; he was cradled in a stable; he went through his brief life on foot; he had no home during his ministry in which to lay his weary head; and his crucified body was buried in a family tomb borrowed from an almost stranger. Yet he was all the time laying the foundations for the most magnificent possessions in the universe of God. He was accumulating the only treasures that can outlast this fleeting globe. They are innumerable human souls redeemed by him unto everlasting glory. To them his prophetic eye looked forward when he said, "They shall be mine in that day when I make up my jewels." More closely rendered, the passage is, "They shall be my peculiar treasure in the day I am preparing."

For one, I like the familiar phraseology in our common version. Christians are Christ's jewels. They are purchased by atoning blood; at an infinite price was this divine ownership secured. As the pearls are only won from the depths of the sea by the dangerous dive of the fishers, so were the pearls for Messiah's crown brought up from the miry depths of depravity by the descent of that divine Sufferer who came to seek and to save the lost. The most brilliant and precious gem known to us is of the same chemical substance as the black and opaque coal of the mine. Crystallization turns the carbon into the diamond. The grace of the Lord Jesus transforms an opaque soul, as black by nature as the jet, into a jewel which reflects the glory of Christ's countenance. All the lustre that the ripest Christian character possesses is but the reflection of that Sun of Righteousness. He who lives nearest to Jesus shines the brightest. A "pearl cast before swine" is not more out of place than is a professed follower of Jesus in the society of scoffers or in the haunts of revelry.

Not all precious jewels glitter in conspicuous positions. The Master has his hidden ones; there are costly sapphires beneath coarse raiment and up in the dingy attic of poverty. That self-denying daughter who wears out her youthful years in nursing a poor infirm mother is a ruby of whom the Master saith, "Thou art mine in the day when I gather my jewels." Many a precious pearl do our faithful Sunday-school teachers fish up from the dregs of ignorance into their mission-schools. From an awful depth did Jesus rescue that converted inebriate near whom we sat last Sabbath at the communion-table. All soul-saving work is a pearl-fishery for King Jesus.

"We are His workmanship," said the great apostle; and the lustre of a gem depends much on the polishing. This is often a sharp and a severe process. Many of God's people can recall the times when they were under the terrible file, or were pressed down to the grinding-wheel. Blessed be the affliction, however fierce, that gives new lustre to the diamond! The Master spendeth no time upon worthless pebbles; only his jewels are polished after the similitude of a palace. Nor is this process only wrought by the divine hand; every Christian must strive to make his or her own character the more shapely and beautiful. "The roughnesses must be smoothed by careful, painstaking self-control, the untrue angles must be cut down by self-sacrifice, the surface must be evened by daily work and spiritual exercise—even trials and sorrows must be borne patiently, knowing that they will give the character an added lustre which will more worthily reflect the Master's image."

When these jewels are made ready for his many crowns, Christ will take them home unto himself. Luther said that there is great divinity in the pronouns of Scripture. "They shall be mine, saith the Lord." This claim is founded on the purchase made in redeeming blood. Regeneration by the Holy Spirit confirms it, and every true believer is also self-surrendered to the ownership of Christ. Up to the hour of conversion we had other proprietors—self, sin, and the devil. Now Jesus says to each Christian, Thou art mine; I own thee. I will instruct thee, and polish thee, and put thee where it pleaseth me. I will take care of thy salvation, and no man shall pluck thee out of my hand. Thou shalt be my peculiar treasure in the day of my triumphant appearing. I will place thee in my crown.

What a coronation day that will be! All else on this globe will be but as lumber and rubbish—fit only for the flames—in comparison with his choice ones. Then shall the homeless man of Nazareth come into full possession of his magnificent trophies. The lost in hell will be outnumbered by the saved in heaven. They that curse Him in the pit will be far fewer than they that crown him in the Paradise. On the head once bleeding with the thorns will flash the diadem of his imperial glory. And then will all the universe confess that the ransom was worth all its bitter cost of agonies, when the King shall ascend his throne of victory, and be encircled with the constellations of his jewels.

CITIZENS OF HEAVEN.

THERE is no meaning at all in the first clause of the twentieth verse of the third chapter of Philippians—"for our conversation is in heaven"—if we use the word "conversation" in its ordinary modern sense. But if we render the sentence according to the original Greek (as it has been done in the new Revision), we have the vividly impressive truth, "Our citizenship is in heaven." To the Christians at Philippi this expression had a peculiar point, for Philippi was a Roman colony; Augustus had made it such after his victory over Brutus. The people were proud of the fact that they belonged to imperial Rome, and received their laws from the city of the Cæsars. While living in Philippi, their citizenship was in that proud capital which ruled the world from the banks of the Tiber.

Even so is every true child of God a citizen of heaven. Our homestead is on high. A part of the blood-bought family are there already, and every day witnesses the home-coming of thousands more. Only a thin veil separates me from the multitudes around the throne; when death drops the veil, I am there! Here on earth I am but a pilgrim—a transient lodger, for this is not my rest. Here we who are Christ's have no continuing city; we are seeking for and pressing towards the magnificent city that hath foundations, whose builder is the Almighty. A wondrous comfort does this thought bring to us amid the discomforts and the sharp trials on the road. This life is only our training-school, to purify us and make us more "meet" for the heavenly community among whom we expect to dwell.

If citizens of the New Jerusalem, then our laws come from thence. The phrase "higher law" used to be jeered at by compromising politicians; but no statesmanship, no party, no policy can stand the test which is not conformed to God's everlasting law of right. The best citizens of this republic are those whose lives are loyal to the higher law which God has written in his Word. No statute is fit to be enacted which contravenes God's truth; and that professed Christian is a coward and a traitor to his Master who does not carry his religion into his politics as much as into his business pursuits or his household.

"If ye love me," said our loving Redeemer, "keep my commandments." The world around us has its unwritten code of morals and of manners. It sets up its standards and fixes its fashions to suit itself. But they are no rule for you and me; Jesus has "chosen us out of the world," and given his own life to be our standard and our pattern. Every consistent Christian's motto should be: I must live for this world, and yet not be of it. Daniel did his best service for wicked Babylon by keeping his windows open towards Jerusalem, and by loyalty to its everlasting King. This world never will be converted by conformity to it; but it would be overwhelmingly impressed by the sight of a vast body of people who should live and speak and act as the citizens of heaven itself. What a salt would our influence be; what a power would our example be; what a trumpet our every word!

Every Christian, therefore, should dare to be singular. It is of little account to be judged of man's judgment; he who judgeth us is the Lord. We are members of society, and bound to contribute our very utmost to its benefit; but we do that best by remembering that our first allegiance is to that society whose leader is Christ. We report to headquarters. The first question with me as a Christian is, What does my Master command? Would he approve my mode of doing business, my style of living, my amusements, my temper, my whole daily conduct? If so, that is enough. My citizenship is with him, and I must see to it that other people recognize that fact. I am not "to be had" when sinful customs make their claims, or worldly seductions offer their bribes.

If I am Christ's servant, then I am a citizen of no mean city—a member of no mean family. Let every Christian assert his high birth by his high bearing. He is never to stoop to anything low, never to be caught at contemptible tricks, never found in suspicious places. As high as the heavens are above the earth, so much higher should a Christian's ways and words and whole conduct be above the ways of sinners. He should never "apologize" to the world for daring to do right.

If we are citizens of heaven, let us be ever setting our affections on things above, on the treasures that are laid up at His right hand. Just as surely as we set our hearts on any lower objects, our hearts are apt to be broken. But when I climb high enough to put my heart, my aims, my most treasured things in the keeping of my Saviour, then Satan himself cannot reach them. Is not this the true "higher life," after all?

The amazing grandeur and glory of this citizenship of heaven will be fully realized when we get there. John says that once "there was silence in heaven for the space of half an hour." Surely if you or I reach the Celestial City, and are ushered into its transcendent light and rush of melodies, we may well be struck silent with unutterable wonder that we are there. Yet we shall be there, if we secure our title through Christ's atoning blood, and if we walk worthy of our high calling, and if we endure as seeing him who is invisible. Then we colonists on this planet shall go home to our mother country, and be for ever with our King!

GIVE CHRIST THE BEST.

“THE best is always good enough for me,” was the playful reply of a lady friend of ours when we asked her which of several things she would prefer. What our friend said playfully may be applied in all seriousness to the gifts which every Christian ought to offer to his Redeemer. The best is never too good for him; in fact, we should never put off our Lord with anything less.

The primal idea of true Christianity is this giving to Jesus all we have and all we are. This is one important meaning of that much-perverted word sanctification. Some people use it to signify a process of purification, or a putting off of moral filthiness, until a perfect sinlessness is reached. But the ordinary meaning of “sanctify” is to set apart, to consecrate to God. When Jesus said, “I sanctify myself,” he certainly did not affirm that he was putting off impurity and becoming perfectly holy. He had never been anything else than sinless. He intended to say, "I consecrate myself to the redemption of man and the fulfilment of my Father's will." A true Christian life is the continual consecration of our bodily powers, of our energies, our affections, our money, our influence to Him who bought us with his blood. The more willing we are to give Jesus the very best we have, the more nearly are we attaining to genuine holiness. Is this the usual practice of those who profess and call themselves Christian?

Take the matter of money. How many Christians habitually give a due share of their income to the Lord? "Ah, I cannot afford to give so much as I once did," is a very current apology. Yes; but you have not retrenched in your style of living. You began by cutting down in your contributions to benevolence, when that ought to have been the very last thing to be touched when retrenchment was forced upon you. The true principle is, give God the first claim, and let others wait until he has been served. "When I get any money," said Erasmus, "I buy books; if any is left I buy clothes." There spoke the genuine scholar.

But too many Christians say in practice, "If I am making money, I shall treat myself to a new carriage, or my family to new furniture, etc.; if there is anything over, I will put it in the contribution-box." The fattest sheep is killed for the table of selfishness. The poor "crow-bait" is palmed off for sacrifice upon God's altar. This same wretched principle is manifested when six days are given to business, and one or two evening hours are stingily begrudged to the prayer-meeting or to works of benevolence. The punishment of all such petit larceny of the Lord is that the perpetrators become mere "crow-baits" spiritually, and never taste the rich morsels which God bestows. "The liberal soul shall be made fat;" all the rest are but skin and bone.

Here is a solemn question for parents in training their children, and for Christian sons and daughters in choosing their calling. "That boy is a very bright fellow; I will make a lawyer of him. His brother is a good conscientious chap; but he has brains enough, I think, for a parson." So reasons the pater familias, and the sons catch the infection. The one with ten talents goes to the Bar, and perhaps becomes a great advocate and a very small Christian. The one with two talents consecrates them to the work of winning souls, and becomes the heir of a great inheritance in heaven. God blessed the one who gave him the best he had; the other "reaped where he had sowed," and did not get a basketful.

Jesus Christ has a sovereign right to the best brains, the best culture, the best estates, the best powers in the land. Suppose that the venerable Stephen H. Tyng had decided in his youth that his capacities were only worthy of the Bar or the Senate House. Suppose that he had entered the lists for wealth and fame, and climbed to the highest round of the ladder. When the frosts of fourscore were gathering on his brow, would he have been the happy man he has been, with the benedictions of Heaven covering his gray hairs like a crown of light?

We do not affirm that a man cannot serve Christ in any other calling than the ministry. But we do affirm that self should never be consulted by a true Christian in making life's choices. Christ's prior right to the very best is the only right rule. And that rule, well observed, will give to Christ's service the "pick" of human power and influence. What is left over may go to the inferior claims of "the things that perish."

RIGHT AND WRONG PRAYING.

“FIND thy happiness in God, and he shall give thee the askings of thy heart.” This is the exact rendering of the fourth verse of the thirty-seventh Psalm, and it throws a flood of light upon the important question of what is right and what is wrong prayer. A great deal of prayer is born of selfishness, and takes on the airs of dictation to our Heavenly Father. It is not humble supplication, born of a devout, submissive spirit; but it amounts to a demand. When we go into our bank and present a check for one thousand dollars, we have a right to demand that sum from the paying-teller, provided that sum stands to our credit on the books of the institution. But God’s promises to his children are not unconditional; and we have no such spiritual assets standing to our credit that we may presume to dictate to the God of wisdom and of love.

The hackneyed illustration of "drawing on the bank of faith" may be very misleading.

What is laid down distinctly as the indispensable quality of right asking in the above quoted verse from the Psalm? It is a right feeling towards God. When a soul comes into such an entire submissiveness towards God that it can honestly say, "Not as I will, but as thou wilt;" when that soul delights in seeing God reign, and in seeing his glory advanced, then its desires will be so purified and so strained from the dregs of selfishness that they may be fearlessly poured out before God. In this frame of unselfish submissiveness the soul may indeed come boldly to the throne of grace, and ask for grace suited to its every hour of need. The desires of God and the desires of a sincere Christly soul will agree. God loves to give to them who love to let him have his way. They are as willing to accept his "no" as his "yes," for they are seeking not their own glory, but his; they find their happiness in the chime of their own desires with the will of God.

A capital illustration of the difference between right and wrong desires is furnished in the biographies of James and John. These two fishermen-disciples come to our Lord and say to him, "Master, we would thou shouldst do for us whatsoever we shall desire." Then bolts out the amazing request that he would place one of them on his right hand and the other on his left, when he set up his imperial government at Jerusalem or elsewhere. Disguise it as they might, they were selfish office-seekers. Their dream was of twelve thrones, with their own in the centre; his foresight saw instead of this three crosses of agony and shame, his own in the centre. It was not a crown, but a cup of suffering, that was in preparation, and he tenderly inquires if they were ready for that. As long as those two ambitious disciples found their happiness in self-seeking, Jesus would not and could not give them the askings of their hearts.

Now, look on a few years farther, and you will find those two identical men uttering the strongest declarations in behalf of God's willingness to hear and answer prayer. Their own hearts have been so renewed by the Holy Spirit, they have become so consecrated to their Master's service, and they are in such complete chime with him, that they are not afraid to come to him and say, "Do for us what we desire." Having purified and unselfish desires, they rejoice to discover how fully and delightfully they are satisfied—even more abundantly than they asked. So one of them (James) declares that if any of us lack wisdom we must ask of God, who giveth liberally. And then—as if he remembered what a disgracefully selfish prayer he had once been guilty of—he says, "Ye ask and ye receive not, because ye ask amiss, that ye may consume it upon your own pleasures." The other disciple (beloved John) exclaims, "Whatever we ask we receive of him, because we keep his commandments, and do those things that are pleasing in his sight." It is not self any longer that is to be pampered, but God that is honored. Just as soon as those two Christians found their supreme happiness in Christ and his cause, they received the askings of their hearts. Christ and they were at one. As a kind father loves to grant the reasonable requests of a dutiful son, so does our Heavenly Father love to grant righteous and reasonable requests through Jesus, the Intercessor.

The only "prayer-gauge" I believe in is that which gauges the character of our prayers and the spirit in which we offer them. The very first essential to all right prayer is unconditional submissiveness to God's will. "Nevertheless, Father, not as I will, but as thou wilt." The richest blessing that prayer can bring is to bring us into closer communion and agreement with the all-holy and the all-loving One. Dr. Bushnell's illustration of the "bow-line" represents this most happily. A man stands in the bow of the boat, and draws upon a line attached to the shore. His pull does not move the solid ground one hair's breadth, but it does move his boat towards the land. So when I attach the line of my desire fast to the everlasting throne, faith does not expect to move the throne, but to draw me closer to it; and when I get more and more into harmony with God, I receive what my heart most desires. Finding my happiness in Christ, I am satisfied. Money, health, promotion, ease, and all kindred cravings, are only lawful when they are subordinated to the higher love; and the moment they get the upper hand we must expect to be dismissed as John and James were when self got the upper hand in them.

The question now arises, What are right desires? As far as my ignorance has been enlightened by the Word, I would reply that every desire is a right one which aims only to please God and not self. Grace does not forbid desires, or reduce us to a spiritual emasculation. It encourages at the same time that it purifies and directs our desires. Nay, the Bible exhorts us to "desire spiritual gifts." Wisdom from above, strength for the hour of need, faith, the outpouring of the Holy Spirit, and kindred blessings, are in harmony with God's promises. These are the very things he has told us to covet. For them we are to "open our mouths wide" and our hearts; and when we do this we are filled unto all the fulness of God. Our Heavenly Father does not hand over to us the reins when our selfishness grasps after them. Nor does he allow our ignorance to be the judge of what is best for us. He often surprises us by sending something better than what we petitioned for. But infinitely the best thing which he can give us is his favor, which is life. If we find our supreme happiness in this—oh, how our souls are purified of low, selfish, wayward, and wicked desires; and with what banqueting on his love, and with what foretastes of heaven, our best askings are answered!

THE NIGHT OF FAILURE—THE MORNING OF FAITH.

MANY of the personal incidents in the lives of our Lord and his disciples light up, like transparencies, with vivid spiritual instruction. One of these is in that most suggestive experience of Peter and Andrew and the two sons of Zebedee, when they "toiled all the night" with their nets and drew in nothing. That long night's work—and probably hard work too—meant failure. Peter's sad words, "Master, we have toiled all night and taken nothing," might be written under the history of more than one human undertaking. Pastors sometimes write this epitaph over their sermons, or over a period of labor that ends in empty nets. Reformers—looking at the largeness of outlay and expectations, and the smallness of visible results—have often thrown away their nets in sheer despair.

Say what we may, the fact remains that good men and women who toil hard in a noble undertaking do not always win immediate success—none certainly that is visible to their own eyes. God is a sovereign. And that signifies that God always means to have his own way, and not ours. We may man our prayer services, or our mission enterprises, or any other Christian undertakings, with a boat-load of capable workers, and just as sure as we begin to count our fish before we have caught them, we may come to shore at last with an empty net. “Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of hosts.” Even Paul’s arm may swing the seed-bag, and Apollos may guide the irrigating water with his foot, but God alone can give the increase. This is the lesson which we have to be taught again and again; for our Heavenly Father always vetoes every claim of human independence.

But let us turn over the leaf and see how the night of failure was followed by the morning of faith. When the sun had lighted up the blue waves of Galilee, and a whole navy of fishing-boats are lying by the strand, Jesus appears. He delivers a discourse to the multitude on the beach, and then he bethinks him of his poor, disappointed disciples. He always feels for us in our disappointments. Knowing what a tedious and fruitless night the four fishermen had spent, and seeing that their nets were washed and mended, he gave the order, "Launch out into the deep, and let down your nets for a draught." Peter had a vast deal of human nature in him; so he frankly says, "Master, we have toiled all night and taken nothing." Had he stopped there, he would have deserved a sharp rebuke. He was despondent, but he was not despairing. So out bolts from his eager tongue that noble answer, "Nevertheless, Lord, at thy word I will let down the net." Here is a motto for faith to nail to its masts. Faith is more than willing to try another venture—yes, a score of them—provided that it has the "word" of Jesus for going ahead. Christ offered to go with them himself. Christ gives the word of command, "Launch out into the deep!" Faith has nothing to do but obey orders and bend to the

oar. Down goes the net. And lo! a mighty swarm of fish is pouring into the net, so that the meshes are breaking with the strain. As busy as fervent Christians are in the most glorious revival are Peter and Andrew in hauling in that overloaded net. Ah, faith has brought FULNESS now. It always does. Peter makes signal to John and James to bring their two smacks alongside and to help harvest the multitude of fish. Both boats are so overloaded that they are in danger of sinking. And Peter is so overwhelmed with the miraculous power of Jesus of Nazareth that he throws himself down at Jesus' knees, and cries out, "O Lord, I am a sinful man!" So grand does Jesus seem to him, and so mean does he seem to himself, that he does not feel fit to remain in his Lord's presence. Sweet indeed was Christ's reply to the awe-struck disciple, "Fear not, Peter; henceforth thou shalt fish for souls; henceforth thou shalt catch men."

I have often thought that the experience of that night of failure and that forenoon of success must have been a capital lesson in the schooling of those apostles. Just such a lesson we need now. We need to be taught that success does not depend on strong arms or strong nets or well-manned boats. It depends on Christ's presence with us in the boats, and our obeying his divine directions.

Methinks that we hear his heavenly voice of love saying to all of us, brothers and sisters, "Launch out into the deep!" Leave the shallow places. Seek for deep experience—deep study of God's precious truth—and deeper draughts of the Spirit of Christ. Then we cannot utterly fail; for faith overcometh, and all things are possible to him that believeth. At the end of every night spent without Christ (however hard we toil) you may write "failure." At the close of every day spent with Christ, and under his oversight, you will joyfully write, "fulness of blessings."

CHRISTIANS FOR THE WORLD—NOT OF IT.

THERE was a prodigious significance in that intercessory prayer of our Lord on the eve of his sufferings: "I pray not that thou shouldst take them out of the world, but that thou shouldst keep them from the evil." The preservation of the world from moral ruin depended on the preservation of the church of God. "Ye are my witnesses," said the Master. The followers of Christ were to be his representatives; the visibility of Christ on earth was to be in the persons, in the acts and lives of those whom he had redeemed to be a peculiar people, zealous in good works. They were to be a wholesome leaven, penetrating the whole mass of humanity; they were to be the salt of the earth, preserving society from putrefaction by the savor of pure godliness. "Let your light shine!" To "shine" means something more than the possession of a renewed heart or the enjoyment of an inward peace. It signifies the luminous reflection of Christ in character and conduct.

This world cannot afford to have Christians degenerate or become demoralized. No city can afford to have its gas apparatus so damaged as to leave its streets in darkness, or its sanitary system so neglected as to leave it a prey to typhoid fevers or cholera. Divine grace is imparted in order to purify its possessor; and he, in turn, is to do his part to purify the community. If he fails, the community is the loser. We who profess to call ourselves Christians ought to know that the world expects us to stand for righteousness, and never to compromise; to act as disinfectants and to maintain our savor; to hold them up, and not to be dragged down by them. If all the Christianity in existence were to become bankrupt in character, even the scoffers themselves would be frightened. Sneer as they may, they expect us to stand by our colors. Our desertion of God and of the right would not only disgrace us; it would alarm even the ungodly. "If this world is so bad with the Christian religion," said the shrewd Franklin, "what would it be without it?"

A personal incident will illustrate this secret reliance which the people of the world have upon the people of God. A young man, who was a professed Christian, was seeking to win the heart and hand of a young lady of wealth and fashion. His suit did not prosper, and one day she said to him, "You know that you are a church member, and I am a gay girl, very fond of what you call the pleasures of the world." This led him to suspect that his religion was the obstacle to his success in winning her consent to marry him. He accordingly applied to the officers of his church, which must have been very loose in its joints, for a release from his membership. They granted it. "Now," said he to her, when he met her again, "the barrier is removed. I have withdrawn from my church and I do not make any profession to be a Christian." The honest-hearted girl turned on him with disgust and horror, and said to him, "M——, you know that I have led a frivolous life, and I feel too weak to resist temptations. I determined that I never would marry any man who was not strong enough to stand firm himself, and to hold me up also. I said what I did just to try you; and, if you have not principle enough to stick to your faith, you have not principle enough to be my husband. Let me never see you again."

Whether this incident be actual or not, the lesson it teaches is beyond dispute. The world expects Christians to stand by their colors; when we desert them, we not only dishonor our Master and ourselves, but we disappoint the world. Christ's church never will save the world by secularizing itself or surrendering its strict principles of loyalty to whatever is right and pure and holy. Conformity to the world will never convert it. "Come out and be ye separate," saith the Lord, "and touch no unclean thing." Even if the world could succeed in bringing the church down to its own standard of opinion and practice, it would only work its own moral destruction. It would extinguish the light-houses which illumine its own channels; it would destroy the spiritual leaven which Christ has ordained and prepared to save human society from corruption.

The demand of this time is not to lower the claims of God, but to elevate them; not to weaken the authority of divine inspiration, but to reinforce it; not to unloose obligations to Bible creeds, but to tighten; not to accommodate Christianity to the thought and fashion of the times, but to keep it stoutly and steadily up to its primitive standards. We must stand fast not only to the faith once delivered to the saints, but to the practices enjoined in God's Word. The church of this day is in no danger of excessive Puritanism. The peril is in the opposite direction. Conformity to the world is weakening the backbone of the church, and thus far diminishing its power to lift the world up towards God. "If thou wouldst pull a man out of a pit," said quaint old Philip Henry, "thou must have a good foothold, or else he will pull thee in."

In no direction should Christians make their testimony more emphatic than in the line of righteous living. The sin of modern civilization has been well described as "making more of condition than it does of character." The very essence of Bible religion is to make character everything, and conduct the test and evidence of character. "By their fruits ye shall know them;" make the tree good and the fruits shall be like it. This is the core of Christ's practical teachings. He "gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity and purify unto himself a peculiar people." The Revised Version has it "that he might purify unto himself a people for his own possession." The gist of this is that Christ owns us, and not the world. Our first duty is to him, and really this is the most effectual way of serving them. Our loyalty to Christ is to be the world's salvation. The moment we betray him we betray them and empty ourselves of all reforming and regenerating power. When the salt has lost its savor it is thenceforth good for nothing but to be cast out and trodden under foot of men. When a Christian so conducts himself as to be despised by his unconverted neighbors, he inflicts upon them an incalculable injury. He confirms them in unbelief. He brings Christianity into contempt. He poisons the well from which they ought to draw good influences. "Ye are my witnesses," said our loving Lord and Master; but what if the witnesses swear falsely?

In whatever direction we apply it, the fact remains clear that society needs a strict, pure, honest, self-denying, godly-minded church. Our politics need a chloride of lime; and Christian citizens ought to engage in civil affairs, not to become tainted themselves, but to purify civil life. To a right-minded Christian a ballot is a trust, and public office is a stewardship for God. The most grievous calamity that could happen to this country would be a divorce of practical Christianity from its politics. Conscience is more to this republic than all its army or navy, or millions of Government bonds.

In commerce and trade Christianity has its indispensable place, and God's people their sphere of usefulness. The Golden Rule is the true Christian's yardstick; commerce becomes a cheat if it is disused or broken. When a church member defaults or turns swindler, he repeats the sin of Judas. Christ is betrayed, and men's faith in Bible integrity is so far shattered. A Christian merchant, manufacturer, or mechanic has a call to serve Christ and save his fellow-men as much as any gospel minister. Every ounce of leaven has its place.

Social life, with increase of wealth, has a trend towards demoralization. Luxury enervates. Popular amusements become sensualized and offer their temptations to the church. "Be ye not conformed to the world" applies to the stage, the ball-room, the wine-cup, and to everything that would turn God's earth into a "Vanity Fair." Conformity to the world amounts, in the end, to more than the corruption of Christ's church. It puts out the light which Christ kindled; it destroys the very leaven which he has prepared to purify and sweeten and save a "world lying in wickedness."

A SERMON ALL THE WEEK.

“WHY do you go to hear Dr. A—— preach? He is not a brilliant preacher.” “Very true,” was the sensible reply; “I know that his pulpit performances are not brilliant, but his life is a sermon to me all the week.” With a minister, as much as with the private Christian, character tells. More than one pulpit orator has destroyed the effect of his discourses by his self-seeking egotism, or his unscrupulous practices, or his overbearing temper, or some other very unchristian trait. On the other hand, full one-half of the power of some eminent pastors lies in their pure, unblemished piety. Everybody believes in them. Their unselfish humility would silence a scoffer. Good as they are in the pulpit, they are still better out of it. Their life is eloquent from Monday morning to Saturday night.

What is true of the ministry is equally true of the laity. An honest, consistent, godly character is a "sermon all the week." Nay, it is Christ's own preaching; for Christ liveth in such a believer, and shines out from him. This good man's fruits are Christ's fruits, just as much as the big, luscious grapes are the outcome of a "Hamburg" vine. The credit does not belong to the grapes so much as it belongs to the vine which yields such superb fruit. Our divine Lord recognized this when he said that herein was he glorified when his disciples bore much fruit.

The living Christian—pure of heart and unspotted by the world—is the best preacher of the gospel in these days. And it is just from the lack of this gospel salt that society suffers corruption and decay. Revivals and conversions are painfully few. The revival that is most urgently needed is a revival of practical godliness. Sunday preaching is not enough; we want more "sermons all through the week."

Let us go down to the core. The only basis of good character is a renewed heart, a heart in which Jesus Christ lives by his divine Spirit, a heart which is in the habit of obeying Christ's commandments. Such a man draws his motives of action from his deep, abiding love to Jesus. Up from the very roots comes his daily devotion to those things which are pure and honest and lovely and of good report. Rooted into Christ, he is not easily shaken. He does not bend to trickery or yield to temptation. The world cannot move such a man. What cares he for its changing, frivolous fashions; his fashion is to do the will of his holy Master.

A spiritual drought does not dry up such a Christian. Some church members are only flourishing during the heavy rains of a revival season; the rest of the year they are as brown and barren as the plains of Nevada. If their pastors grow sick and tired of such fitful professors, how patient must their Lord be to endure them at all!

Let the reader of this volume examine himself, or herself, in the light of conscience and God's Word. Perhaps you are wondering why so few are converted, and why the church has so little power, and why the attendance upon God's house is so scanty, and the state of religion is so low. The reason is that more of the preaching of practice is needed all through the week. And none of us can rise higher before the world than the fountain-head in our own hearts.

"O God, renew within me a right spirit!"

THE LILY-WORK ON THE PILLARS.

THERE were two massive pillars in the porch of Solomon's Temple which bore the names of "Jachin" and "Boaz." One name signifies "He will establish," and the other signifies "In strength." The two together are admirable emblems of solid goodness of character. Not hollow, not easily thrown off their base, and of undecaying material, they typify the firmness and the strength of the man who is immovably fixed, trusting on the Lord. But, while these two pillars were made strong, they were also made ornamental; for they were inwreathed with delicate chains of carved pomegranates, and "upon the capitals of the pillars was lily-work." Thus are strength and beauty to be combined in every well-developed Christian character.

Beauty is that combination of harmony in color or in form that gives pleasure to the eye of the beholder. One of the profoundest prayers in the Bible is the prayer that the beauty of the Lord our God may be upon us. One of the richest promises is that "the meek will He beautify with salvation," and the loftiest ideal set before us is "the beauty of holiness." When our eyes gaze upon our enthroned Saviour in his celestial splendors, then shall they "see the King in his beauty." It was the ineffable perfection of Jesus of Nazareth which not only constitutes the glory of the New Testament, but furnishes the most unanswerable argument for the essential divinity that was clothed in human form.

Christ enjoined upon every one of his disciples to study him, to learn of him, and to imitate his example. A true Christian is the representative of Christ in this world—the only embodiment of gospel teaching and influences that is presented in human society. How vitally important is it, then, that those of us who profess and call ourselves Christians should make our Christianity attractive! Multitudes of people know very little and think very little about the Lord Jesus; nearly all the ideas they get of his religion is what they see in those who profess it, and their eyes are as sharp as those of a lynx to discover whether their neighbor is one whit the better for his religion. I will venture to say that the life of William E. Dodge was the most eloquent sermon in behalf of practical Christianity which has been presented in this community lately. It was worth many a volume of ingenious Apologetics to refute infidelity and silence the gainsayers.

But not all the solid piety is as attractive as it might be made. There is many a Jachin and a Boaz that has not much lily-work about his harsh and repulsive character. Of course we do not refer to such disgraceful delinquencies as some church members are guilty of, who defraud their neighbors, or steal trust funds, or practise knaveries in politics, or befoul themselves with sensual excesses. Such members of the flock do not wear a fleece big enough to hide the wolf. But we might instance thousands of genuine Christians, honest at heart and sincere in their professions, who would be wonderfully improved by lopping off some of their unsightly branches. Egotistical brother A—— would look better in the eyes of his neighbors if he had not so many “I’s” of his own. Brother B—— is devout in his prayers, but his clerks and his employés would enjoy hearing them better if he did not treat them as if they were pack-mules. Mrs. C—— is indefatigable in the Ladies’ Benevolent Union; but her ill-conditioned children look as if they needed a Dorcas Society at home. And so we might go through the alphabet with descriptions of those whom the grace of God has converted, but they have not added many of the graces of “lily-work” to their religious constructions.

None of us need travel a mile to find some unquestionable Christians who sour their religion with censoriousness. Grant that their standard is high and exacting; but who made them judges over their neighbors? After an hour’s talk with them, you acquire an insensible prejudice against some of the best people in your community. Such Christians are in God’s orchard; but they bear crab apples. Everybody respects their sincerity, both in creed and conduct; yet nobody loves them. I once had a venerable and most godly-minded member of my church who never did a very wrong act to my knowledge. I am sorry to say that he scarcely ever did a pleasant one. There was a good, sound nut in that chestnut-burr; but no one liked to prick his fingers in coming at it. So the rugged, honest old man (who in a humble way reminded me of Carlyle) was left to go on his way to heaven, working and praying and scolding as he went stubbornly along; and even the children in the street were almost afraid to speak to him. I suppose he has grown mellowed since he passed into the genial atmosphere of the better world. One of the most blessed things about heaven is that the best and holiest who are admitted there will have left every disagreeable thing about them outside the gates.

Sanctification is a genuine and gracious process, and it never reaches completeness in this life. This should make us tolerant and charitable towards the infirmities of sincere followers of our Master. Yet it should never excuse our own wilful adherence to words, or practices, or traits of character which disfigure our religion and mar our influence. In building a character for eternity we should regard its impression on our fellow-men; we are as much bound to ornament it with the "lily-work" as we are to make the structure solid and enduring. An attractive Christian is the one who hits the most nearly that golden mean between pliant laxities on the one hand and severe or sanctimonious harshness on the other hand. He is strict, but not censorious. He is sound, and yet sweet and mellow, as one who dwells much in the sunshine of Christ's countenance. He never incurs contempt by compromising with wrong, nor does he provoke others to dislike of him by doing right in a very harsh or hateful or bigoted fashion.

Our Master is our model. What marvellous lily-work of gentleness, forbearance, and unselfish love adorned the massive divinity of that life! What he was, we, in our imperfect measure, should pray and strive after. Study Jesus, brethren. Get your souls saturated with his spirit. His grace imparted to you and his example imitated can turn deformity into beauty, and adorn your lives with whatsoever things are true and honest and lovely and of good report. He that winneth souls is wise. But if we would win the careless and the godless to our Saviour, we must make our daily religion more winsome.

STANDING THE STRAIN.

How often do we ever hear a sermon or ever think about poor Rizpah? There she sits—in the sacred story—for five long, weary months upon the sackcloth spread on the rock of Gibeah. The noonday sun pours down its heats upon her head, and the midnight its chilling dews, but they cannot drive her from her steady vigil beside the forms of her two crucified sons. From the early harvests of April to the early rains of October she suffers neither the birds of the air to assail them by day, nor the beasts of the field by night. The wayfarers by the northern road from Jerusalem grow accustomed to the strange, sad spectacle of that heart-broken mother guarding from vulture and jackal the remains of her beautiful Mephibosheth and Armoni.

Those two youths were crucified; there seems but little doubt of that. They were sacrificed to appease the wrath of the Gibeonites for the cruelties once practised upon them by the hands of their father Saul. If we could ask that long-enduring woman, Rizpah, what enabled her to stand those five months of severe strain, her answer would be in one single word, "Love." It was the quenchless affection of a true mother's heart. It transcends every other earth-born affection. It can neither be "chilled by selfishness, nor daunted by danger, nor weakened by worthlessness, nor stifled by ingratitude." This was the chord that bound Rizpah to that long vigil on the desolate rock and stood the tremendous strain.

There is a lesson for every Christian in this touching episode of the "mater dolorosa" on the rock of Gibeah. There is only one principle in the human heart which can withstand the severe strain which the daily wear and tear of temptation and trial bring upon us. It is love for Jesus. Our heart must be in our religion, and our religion in our heart, or else it is a most toilsome drudgery or an irksome hypocrisy. This is the secret reason why so many church members shirk their duties. There is no genuine, long-enduring love of their crucified Master at the core of the heart. So their religion is toil and task-work. The Bible is taken as a medicine, and not devoured as honey. There must be a constant baiting and bribing by attractions of fine preaching and fine music, or else the Sabbath service would be a sort of compulsory penance. As it is, about every rainy Sunday brings doubt and disgrace upon full one-half of the professed piety of the land. A man in whose soul love for Jesus rings no bell of devotion is always glad of an excuse to shirk the sanctuary on a disagreeable day. Money-giving for Christ's cause is to such a professor an orthodox larceny; he flings his contribution at the box grudgingly, as if he would say, "There it is, since you must have it; when will these everlasting calls be done with?" The whole routine of external service in the name of religion is gone through slavishly, perfunctorily, and heartlessly, as if the lash of an overseer was brandished over the head. Such Christianity is Christless. There is no joy and no power in it, and when a severe strain of temptation comes on its possessor, it snaps like a thread, and leaves him to a terrible fall. The secret of every case of bad backsliding during the past year has been the want of staying power; and that staying power is based solely on the indwelling of Christ and a supreme love for him.

Love of Jesus is essential Christianity. It endureth all things; it never faileth. No privations can starve it, and no burdens can break it down. It keeps the heart of the frontier missionary warm amid the snows of the Rocky Mountains, and gives sweetness to the crust which the overworked seamstress eats in her lonely lodging—disdaining the wages of sin. It is the core of all the piety which Christ loves to look at. It is the only cure also of the reigning worldliness and covetousness and fashion-worship which have made such spiritual havoc in too many churches.

The test-question for every Christian life is, Have I in my inmost heart a love of Jesus strong enough to stand the strain? My religious profession has lost its novelty; will it hold out? Temptations will come; shall I conquer them or break? Christ demands constant loyalty; can I be true to him? Am I as ready to stand watch day and night to protect his honor as poor Rizpah was to protect the lifeless forms of her beloved from the birds and the beasts? These are the questions that touch the very marrow of our religion. They underlie all our heart-life, our church-life, and the very existence of every work of self-denying charity.

My brother, there is only one way to be a staying Christian, a thorough soul-saving Christian. It is to get the heart full of Jesus—so full that the world and the lusts of the flesh and the devil can get no foothold. Whether you are a pastor longing for a fresh blessing on your flock, or a Sabbath-school teacher set in charge of young immortals, or a parent guarding the fireside fold, or a philanthropist toiling for the ignorant, the suffering, and the lost, you need this ~~ever~~ living mainstay and inspiration. If you only love Jesus, you will love to live for him and to labor for him. Jacob toiled seven years faithfully for Rachel, and they seemed unto him but a few days, for the love which he had to the beautiful maiden in the fields of Laban. Love's labors were light. Would you then be a light-some, joyous laborer in Christ's vineyard? Get your heart full of him. Would you be a power in your church? Get the heart full of Jesus. Would you be kept safe from backsliding? Then keep yourself in the love of your Saviour. Put that master-affection so deep down that it shall underlie all selfishness; so deep that the frosts of the current skepticism cannot reach it; so deep that the frictions of daily life cannot wear upon it; so deep that the power of temptation cannot touch it; so deep that even when old age dries up the other affections of our nature, this undying love shall flow like an artesian well.

Let us stop then occasionally and take one look at that steadfast Rizpah watching beside the crosses of her crucified sons. She stood the strain, until her noble constancy won the king's eye and secured their honorable burial. There is an infinitely holier cross, an infinitely diviner Sacrifice that demands our steadfast loyalty. If a mother's love could endure so much, what will not the love of a redeemed soul bear for its Redeemer? Oh, for a fresh baptism of this mighty love—a fresh and a full inpouring, so that no accursed spirit of the world, no temptation, no self-indulgence, no, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord!

TURNING WINTER INTO SPRING.

AT the midwinter season many people fall, naturally, into the error that the sun emits less heat than during the midsummer. But while we are shivering with the cold, the fact is that the mighty furnace of the sun is glowing with the same heat as in July—a heat so intense that every square foot of its vast surface gives off enough energy to drive the colossal engine of the Centennial exhibition—a heat that, concentrated, would melt a column of ice fifty miles in diameter as fast as it shot towards the sun, even though it flew with the speed of light! The simple reason why we all shiver in February is that our globe lies at another angle towards the solar furnace, and only receives its indirect radiations. The change is in our position.

This astronomic fact gives a new freshness and vividness to that prayer of the Psalmist:

“Turn us, O God, and cause thy face to shine, and we shall be saved.” God’s love is inexhaustible and unchangeable. He is the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever. The reason why a Christian is cold, or why a church gets frozen up, is that they have swung off from God, and put themselves into the same position towards him that our globe has towards the winter sun. When a Christian backslides from duty, he throws himself out of the sunlight of God’s countenance. His spiritual winter is of his own making. So with an ice-bound church, in which formality and fashion and frigidity have so lowered the spiritual temperature that the plants of grace are frostbitten. Sermons lie like icicles upon its floor; its prayer-room becomes a refrigerator, and no poor sinner is ever attracted in thither to be warmed and melted. This is hardly a caricature of those churches in which conversions have sunk down to zero.

The first duty of a cold Christian, or a church of cold Christians, is to recognize and confess a wrong position towards God. He that never mourns never mends. He who covereth his sins must take the consequences. But when we are ready to say and do say, "O God! I have wandered away from thee; I have fled from thy face into the cold atmosphere of worldliness and selfishness and unbelief; help me to turn from my backslidings;" when our hearts utter this prayer, there is the first step taken towards recovery. Such an honest, contrite confession as this, made without any attempt at concealment or excuse, would be the harbinger of a revival in scores of churches to-day. God never blesses one of his children while in an attitude of disobedience. The change needed is not a change of our circumstances, although we often make a scapegoat of the word and talk about "our unfavorable circumstances." The change demanded is one of character and conduct. The love of the world—the silly ambition to walk in a vain show—and that "big house-devil" of self-indulgence, have drawn the soul away from Christ. "He that is nearest to me is nearest to the fire," is one of the traditional utterances of our Lord, not reported by the evangelists. Whether Christ ever uttered this or not, it is undeniable that he who is farthest from him is the most frozen and lifeless.

The first step, then, is a reconversion. The word "conversion" signifies a turning from sin to the Saviour. Reconversion is not regeneration, for the Bible never speaks of such a thing as being "born again" a great many times. Reconversion means simply the return of a backsliding Christian to God and to the path of forsaken duties. Peter was thus reconverted after his shameful fall in Pilate's judgment-hall. The very gist of the prayer, "Turn us, O God," is that the Holy Spirit will move us with mighty power, and so work in us that we shall return to the Lord and begin a new style of holy living. As Spurgeon pithily puts it, "All will come right when we are right." All will come right with me the moment that I get into the right position towards God. All will come right with the minister's sermons, and with the prayer-meetings and with the Sabbath-school; a new converting power will descend into the church just as soon as it swings back from the polar regions of sin into the light of God's countenance.

There is only one way by which nature turns winter into spring; it is by bringing the face of the earth into a new position towards the sun-rays. Then the snow-banks vanish, the seeds sprout, the grass peeps out, the buds open, and the sun reneweth the face of the year. Even so there is but one way to be delivered from a spiritual winter which blights our graces and kills all spiritual activity. It is by coming back to God so that his face may shine upon us. Then we shall walk in the broad, full light of his countenance without stumbling. Then our affections will thaw out, and, with some Christians, one of the first symptoms will be seen in the opened purse. Then tongues long frozen up will begin to be heard in the prayer-meeting. A new quickening power will descend and make the buried seeds of gospel truth to start up into the awakening and conversion of souls. God's face, God's favor will accomplish all this and divers other rich and wonderful blessings. In short, we shall be saved.

Christians will be saved from the guilt of neglected duty. We shall be saved from the deadly malaria of the world, and saved from the dominion of the adversary. The impenitent will be reached, and so turned from the error of their ways as to save their souls from death eternal. This, my dear brethren, is the urgent, imperative need of the hour—even a thorough, hearty turning back into the full blaze and light and heat of God's face. Oh, what a revival that will bring! Faithless praying and fruitless preaching will disappear like ice in April. God will cause his face to shine upon us and restore unto us the joys of his salvation. Then shall transgressors be taught his ways, and sinners (both in the church and out of it) be converted to the Lord. The winter will be past and gone, and the time of the singing of souls will come again.

ONE BY ONE.

WHEN a lad I used to join in the apple-gatherings in the ripe month of October. The common fruit, which was destined to the cider-press or the swine, was shaken from the trees, and no amount of bruising did any harm. But the choice pippins and Spitzenbergs, which were destined for the apple-bins, were carefully picked by hand. Those were gathered one by one; we intended that they should keep through the winter.

This process illustrates the only effectual method for the conversion of souls. "Ye shall be gathered one by one," was the declaration made to God's people in the olden time. The Lord declares that in the time of the purification and restoration of Israel he would gather in his grain seed by seed; each seed should be tested, and not a single one overlooked, or one genuine kernel be lost. This emphasizes the fact that in God's sight there is no such thing as "the masses." God sees only individuals; every one unlike every other, and every one the possessor of an immortal soul. Guilt is an individual thing appertaining to a personal conscience; when a nation sins, or when a church goes astray, it simply means that there are a great many personal sinners. Nor are sinners saved by regiments. When three thousand were converted in a single day at Jerusalem, each one repented for himself, each one came into personal union with the risen Christ.

When engaged in earnest efforts for the conversion of souls, it is vitally important for Christians to study and imitate the example of Jesus and his apostles. A very large portion of Christ's inspired biography is occupied by his personal interviews—with a guilty woman by a well, with a publican by the wayside, with a young ruler, with a blind beggar, or with a Nicodemus in a private room. To the Son of God, as to every faithful gospel minister, one soul was a great audience. The single extended discourse which Christ delivered was aimed at every auditor before him.

No fact is more patent on the face of the book of the Acts than that it is the record chiefly of individual labors for the conversion or the spiritual training of individuals. Those first Christians were men and women who understood thoroughly their personal responsibility and the power of personal effort. Find, if you can, the appointment of a single "committee" in the book of the Acts. Seven men were indeed designated to the work of dispensing charities to the poor; but this was done in order to release the others for personal labor in declaring the word of life. Very little is said about church organizations. Nothing was allowed to keep man from man—the individual believer from the individual sinner. Peter goes right after Cornelius; Philip talks directly to Queen Candace's treasurer; Aquila and Priscilla have a great Bible-class in the person of eloquent Apollos; and Dorcas is a sewing-society in herself. Amid all the Conventions and "Union meetings" and endless talk about revivals, is there not danger that each Christian may forget that he or she is the bearer of one lamp? And if that lamp be well filled with grace, and its light be lovingly thrown on one sinner's path, more good will be accomplished than by a whole torchlight procession out on parade. A crowd is often in the way when a soul is to be rescued. Christ led a deaf man out of the crowd when he wished to deal with him alone. Those early Christians wrought wonders for God and dying humanity, but they accomplished them by the simple direct method—every man to his man. Personal holiness made each worker a partner with the Omnipotent Jesus.

As I recall my own ministerial experience, I can testify that nearly all the converting work done has been by personal contact with souls. For example, I once recognized in the congregation a new-comer, and at my first visit to his house was strongly drawn to him as a very noble-hearted, manly character. A long talk with him seemed to produce little impression; but before I left he took me up stairs to see his three or four rosy children in their cribs. As we stood looking at the sleeping cherubs, I said to him, "My friend, what sort of a father are you going to be to these children? Are you going to lead them towards heaven, or—the other way?" That arrow lodged. At our next communion season he was at the Master's table, and he soon became a most useful officer in the church. There is an unbolted door in about everybody's heart, if we will only ask God to show us where to find it.

Every pastor, and every successful Sunday-school teacher will recall similar experiences of personal interviews that did the business. Harlan Page never attempted any other method than hand-picking. Even Mr. Moody has often told me that his most effective work is done in the inquiry-room, where he deals with souls one by one. The true way to insure conversions in our congregations is for individual Christians (you, for instance) to give themselves afresh to Jesus, and then go after some one soul that is within the reach of their influence. Be on the watch for opportunities. Do a personal kindness, or make a personal visit to open the way to the heart's door. Sometimes a kind, faithful letter is blessed to a soul's awakening. A single sentence, kindly spoken to him in the street, brought one of my neighbors to the Saviour. Heaven has its myriads of saved sinners; but they were gathered there one by one.

Let me also remind those Christians who desire to make this opening year a time for growth in godliness, that they may commit the serious mistake of trying to grow "by wholesale." A vague desire to be better, stronger, holier, will come to nothing. Character is built, like the walls of an edifice, by laying one stone upon another. Lay hold of some single fault and mend it. Put the knife with God's help to some ugly besetting sin. Stop that one leak that has let so much foul bilge-water into your soul. Put into practice some long-neglected duty. The first step to improvement with one person was to banish his decanters; with another, to discontinue his secular paper on Sunday morning; with another, to ask the pardon of an injured friend; with another, to go after some street Arabs and take them to a mission-school. He can never be rich towards God who despises a pennyworth of true piety. Holiness is just living aright in the least things as well as the greatest; for graces can only be gathered one by one.

“ I count this thing to be grandly true,
That a righteous deed is a step towards God,
Lifting the soul from its common clod
To a purer air and a clearer view.

“ Heaven is not reached by a single bound,
But we build the ladder by which we rise
From the lowly earth to the vaulted skies,
And we mount to its summit round by round.”

GLEANNING FOR CHRIST.

RUTH, the Moabitess, was in many respects a model for our American maidens. Too industrious to be ashamed of honest work—too independent to rely on her poor mother for her daily bread—she goes out to the barley-field to glean after the reapers. She knows that it is the custom of the country to leave some stalks of corn for the poor to gather. Boaz also commands his harvesters to “let fall some of the handfuls on purpose for her.” The wisest of all charities is that which helps the poor to help themselves. Ruth has a brave heart and nimble fingers, does not mind a backache or a scratch of her fingers among the brambles; and at sunset she comes home to her mother with an ephah of barley. Proud mother is Naomi as she inquires of the busy-fingered girl, “Where hast thou gleaned to-day?”

This is a fitting question for every Christian on a Sabbath evening. Equally fit is it for every Sunday-school teacher at the close of his or her day's work. All genuine Bible-study is glean- ing. Some of the most nutritious and soul- strengthening truths are unexpected discoveries. We come upon them just where we did not expect to find them. Right in the midst of a cata- logue of names in the fourth chapter of Chroni- cles we light upon the word "Jabez," the child who was born in sorrow, but proved to be a sun- shine and a blessing. That little stroke of Bible history has been a mine of spiritual instruction to many a child of God. There is good glean- ing too, in the book of Leviticus—which some care- less people set down as a mere catalogue of Jew- ish upholsteries. Such Bible explorers as Bonar and Arnot and Bushnell and Moody will bring you an "ephah of barley" out of the neglected corners of God's wonderful grain-field. He lets fall many a handful for the benefit of those who believe that every line in their Bibles is inspired, and was written for a purpose. The ministers who never wear out are the men who are never afraid of a backache in searching for a fresh truth.

Genuine work for the ingathering of souls is like Ruth's work in her kinsman's barley-field. It may be described by four P's. In the first place it is patient. No pastor or Sunday-school teacher is fit for his post unless he has rubbed the word "can't" out of his vocabulary. The hardest part of all Christian work is to toil a great while with little or no result. Captain Buford at West Point broke off the trunnion of a cannon by repeated blows of a hammer. If there had been one stroke the less, the iron would not have yielded. It takes a long hammering to break some hearts, and to beat some vital truths into some dull consciences. Unless Ruth had been content to pick up one spear at a time she never would have got her bag of barley.

2. The next qualification for a good gleaner is to be painstaking. Ralph Wells will find a hundred kernels of golden grain in a passage which a careless reader will pronounce as empty as the east wind. He will spare no pains either to win some young street Arab who was regarded as a fair candidate for the police station. Christ Jesus took a long journey into the coast of Tyre and Sidon, just to bring a blessing to one poor woman. What pains he took with that bigoted and loose-principled woman of Sychar, until he had probed her heart to the core. The longest of all his recorded conversations was with a person whom his disciples would disdain to notice. If Christians would exercise their ingenuity and set themselves resolutely to work, as Harlan Page did, for the conversion of individual souls, our churches might be doubled every year.

3. All good work comes to nothing which is given up when half done. If Harlan Page had stopped that winter evening talk with young E. H—— at the corner of the street before his young friend surrendered to Christ, then that soul might have lost the precious gift of eternal life, and New York lost one of its best pastors. "Why do you tell that boy the same thing twenty times?" "Because," replied Susannah Wesley,

"the other nineteen times will go for nothing unless the twentieth time makes the impression." God's Spirit is wonderfully persevering in the conversion and discipline of souls. It required a long process to build up such a man as Paul. A great sculptor never begrudges the chisel strokes which fit his "Eves" and "Greek Slaves" to shine in the gallery of masterpieces. A Christian is carving for eternity.

4. But no patience, and no painstaking and persevering labor for Jesus will secure the result without the gift of the knees. Prayer brings God to our aid, and then the victory is sure. From Paul's day to this, the men and women who bring in the big sheaves have been "instant in prayer." Out of the hardest fields and the thorniest experiences a prayerful soul will gather the "ephah" for God's granaries. Brother! sister! have you attained to the four P's in your spiritual training? Then, at the close of life's toils, when you stand up for the final reckoning, you will not be afraid to meet the question, "What have you gleaned to-day?"

SEEKING AFTER HOLINESS.

THE word holiness is formed from holy, which signifies whole, sound, entire. Holiness is equivalent to the old Saxon word wholth or health; therefore a holy person is one who has been healed, and is in a sound spiritual condition. The real disease that afflicts and maims and torments and kills is sin. Holiness is the recovery from the controlling and deadly power of this disease. But as we never yet saw any one so perfectly healthy as never to feel an ache or a pain, so we need not expect here to be beyond the smart of inward sinfulness of desire—the pain of much conscious wrong-doing, and the mortifying sense of incompleteness and shortcoming. The very expression which Paul employs, “ye are complete in Him,” means, “ye are made full in Him.” It refers to completeness of provision in Christ, and not to any completeness of performance or character in us.

Shall we seek after holiness? Is there any encouragement to do this? Yes; not only encouragement as strong as the love of Jesus can make it, but obligation also.

A holy Christian is one who is in good health. The heart has been delivered from the supreme control of the devil, and brought under the blessed dominion of Christ. The conscience is quick to detect sin—even under some smooth disguises—and rises into protest and strong struggles against it. The affections go out towards Jesus; there is a sweet delight in his service, and an honest endeavor to keep his commandments. A Christian's liberty is the possibility of serving God; the bond-slave of sin has not reached that, and never can until Christ strikes off his fetters. One of the best evidences of holiness we know of is the aim to obey Christ, and the sharp sense of contrition and self-abasement when he has been disobeyed. He who mourns not, mends not. We don't believe that the godliest man or woman lives who does not often have need to smite on the breast, and cry out, "God be merciful to me a sinner!"

For the holiness that fights against sin, battles with temptation, keeps unspotted from the world, and lays self on the altar, there is a crying need in our time. It is a sympathetic spirit, going about doing good, yet it has no sympathy with evil customs and the fashions of the world. It strives to keep clean. Against the downward pull of the world it braces itself and says, "If others do this, yet will not I." It dares to be singular and unfashionable. It keeps out of places where it would be smirched; and finds such enjoyment in its prayer-service, its Bible-study, its deeds of charity, and in the innocent joys of life, that it does not hanker after the playhouse and kindred sensualities. Walking in the Spirit, it does not stoop to the lusts of the flesh.

This soul-health is not got by single occasional acts, such as going to a "Bible-reading," or a meeting for promoting holiness, or by coming to the communion-table. Whatever benefit may be got by these or other exercises, the case demands something deeper than externals. The soul must take in Christ, and let him abide there. The will must submit to him, and let him control, and the life must feel his invigorating power as my body feels the nourishing effect of wholesome bread and the restoring effects of honest sleep. The pulse of the heart must beat for Christ steadily—not with feverish rapidity to-day and feeble languor to-morrow.

Surely we may aspire after such health of heart and wholesome and happy living as are briefly outlined above. The more we possess it the less shall we boast of it. Other people will detect it, as we do the presence of the fire that is burning in the stove. The inward heat comes out and affects every particle of air in the room. We can no more conceive of genuine holiness that is unfelt by others than we can of a burning fire that emits no warmth.

GLIMPSES OF HEAVEN.

ONE of the many internal evidences that the Bible is of divine origin is furnished by its method of dealing with heaven. If it were a human composition, it would devote a large space to that existence in which immortal beings are to spend everlasting ages; it would dwell on numberless particulars in its description of the "better country." But God's Book devotes over one hundred average pages to the rules of life in this world—even though this life on earth is measured by two or three score of years. Its aim is to show us the way to heaven; and when we get there it will be time enough to find out what manner of place it is, and what will be the precise employments of its occupants. A very few sentences only in God's Word are devoted to the description of the saints' everlasting home. The Bible says just enough to pique our curiosity and to stimulate speculation, but not enough to lift the sublime mystery which o'erhangs it like a cloud of glory. A few things seem clear to us. It is a place—a distinctly bounded one—or else such words as “walls” and “gates” are a mere phantasy. The light of it proceeds from a central throne; for the Lamb who is in the midst of the throne is the light thereof.

There is something beautifully suggestive in the many-sidedness of heaven, with gates of entrance from every point of the compass. This emphasizes the catholicity of God's “many mansions,” into which all the redeemed shall enter, from all parts of the globe, and from every denomination in Christ's flock. All shall come in through Christ, yet by many gateways. The variety of “fruits” on the trees of life points towards the idea of satisfying every conceivable taste and aspiration of God's vast household.

Heaven is assuredly to be a home; its occupants one large, loving household. It will meet our deepest social longings; no one will complain of want of “good society.” The venerable Em-mons is not the only profound thinker who has fed his hopes of "a good talk with the apostle Paul." Dr. Guthrie is not the only parent who has felt assured that his "wee Johnnie" would meet him inside the gate. Many a pastor counts on finding his spiritual children there as a crown of rejoicing in that day. The recognition of friends in heaven cannot be a matter of doubt. Nor will any hateful spirit of caste mar the equalities of a home where all have a common Lord and all are brethren.

When Cyneas, the ambassador of Pyrrhus, returned from his visit to Rome in the days of her glory, he reported to his sovereign that he had seen a "commonwealth of kings." So will it be in heaven, where every heir of redeeming grace will be as a king and priest unto God, and divine adoption shall make every one a member of the Royal family. What a comfort that we need never to pull up our tent-poles in quest of a pleasanter residence. Heaven will have no "moving-day." When you and I, brother, have packed up at the tap of death's signal-bell, we set out on our last journey, and there will be a delightful permanence in those words "for ever with the Lord." The leagues to that home are few and short. Happy is that child of Jesus whose life-work is kept up so steadily to the line that he is ready to leave it at an instant's notice; happy is he who is ever listening for the invitation to hasten to his home.

One of the best evidences of the changed and entirely sanctified condition of Christians in that new world of glory will be that God can trust us there with complete, unalloyed prosperity! I never saw a Christian yet in this world who could be; even Paul himself needed a "thorn" to prick his natural pride and keep him humble. There is not one of us whose religion might not soon decay, like certain fruits, if exposed to the blazing heat of a perpetual sunshine. Here we require constant chastisements, constant lettings-down, and frequent days of cloud and storm. God could not more effectually ruin us than by letting us have our own way.

But in heaven we can bear to be perpetually prosperous, perpetually healthy, perpetually happy, and freed from even the need of self-watchfulness! The hardest recognition of heaven will be to know ourselves. We shall require no rods of discipline there, and there will be no house-room for crosses in the realms of perfect holiness. Can it be that you and I shall ever see a day that shall never know a pang, never witness a false step, never hear a sigh of shame or mortification, never see one dark hour, and never have a cloud float through its bright, unbroken azure of glory? Can all this be? Yes, this may all and will all be true of me, if I am Christ's faithful child; but oh! what a changed creature must I be when I get on the other side of that gate of pearl! Heaven will not be a greater surprise to us than we shall be to ourselves.

THE WRECK OF THE GOLD-SHIPS.

THERE are many passages in the Word of God that most readers pass by, as they would pass unlighted transparencies in the street at night. If somebody sets a lamp or kindles a gas-jet behind the transparency, its picture or inscription becomes luminous, attracting all eyes to it. One purpose of good preaching is to set lamps behind neglected passages.

Among the overlooked episodes in Old Testament history which are full of suggestive wisdom is one in the life of that good and great Judæan monarch, Jehoshaphat. His reign exalted the southern kingdom to a high prosperity. He wrought a good educational work among his people, and established a commission for expounding the Mosaic laws. He did many other noble things; but upon the lustre of his character and reign fell one great and grievous shadow. It was the sin of alliance with wicked men. Jehoshaphat had riches and honor in abundance, and his heart was lifted up in the ways of the Lord; yet he "joined affinity with Ahab," the profligate tyrant of the northern kingdom. He gave his son in marriage to Ahab's daughter, and made a military alliance with Ahab, which ended in the battle of Ramoth-Gilead, in which the northern king played a treacherous part and lost his life. Not satisfied with these entangling alliances, which were both prompted by selfish policies, he entered into a commercial partnership with Ahab's successor, the godless Ahaziah. Jehu, a prophet of Jehovah, had the courage to administer the sharp rebuke, "Shouldst thou help the ungodly, and love them that hate the Lord? Therefore is wrath upon thee from before the Lord."

The narrative of Jehoshaphat's venture with wicked Ahaziah reads very much like some of the "big bonanza" schemes of these days in Colorado and Nevada. The two monarchs join hands in a gold-hunting expedition. The sacred chronicler tells us that they built ships in partnership, on the Gulf of Akabah, for the purpose of seeking gold in Ophir. But the ill-starred enterprise was blasted by the Lord; the "ships went not; for they were wrecked at Ezion-geber." This was no accidental catastrophe; for the fearless Eliezer told Jehoshaphat plainly, "Because thou hast joined thyself with Ahaziah the Lord hath broken (or wrecked) thy works." Upon that illuminated transparency which pictures the wreck of the gold-ships there blazes out this truth : partnership with sin is a fatal mistake.

We could fill the pages of this book with illustrations of this truth drawn from our own observation. Many a sorrowing father can tell the story of what befell his beloved boy. The youth, fascinated with a set of gay fellows, who were "posted" in all the amusements of the town, fell into their snares, and spent his evenings with them in their favorite haunts. His night-key admits him to the door of home in the "small hours," while his foolish parents are on their pillows. It is the old, old story, short but crushing. Like Eli, 'the father "restrains not" the son when he is "making himself vile," and like Eli, he pays the bitter penalty. When the ruin has been wrought by a round of wine-suppers, theatres, and brothels, the parents get their eyes open to see that evil company has wrecked their gold-ship. The streets of all our cities, like the rocks of Ezion-geber, are strewn with the ruins of high hopes that went to pieces in wicked associations. When parents intrust a night-key to a son who has no self-restraint or Bible-conscience, they give him a free pass on the road to perdition.

There is another phase of domestic life in which this Old Testament episode finds its frequent parallels. We recall now an only daughter of rare beauty and accomplishments. Her perilous charms attracted a suitor who was coarse and sensual; but he was heir to an expected fortune. His anticipated wealth bribed the foolish parents and overcame the daughter's scruples. She consented, contrary to her own judgment, to marry him. Within a few years he was disgraced, and she was divorced. God's law is, "Whatsoever ye sow, that shall ye also reap." It was that law, more irresistible than the winds of heaven, that wrecked the poor girl's gold-ship in broken hopes and a broken heart. Of all the alliances with sin from mercenary motives, the most certainly fatal are those which are made under the sacred name of wedlock.

The political history of our country is sadly eloquent with examples of civilians and statesmen who have wrecked their careers by alliances with wrong men, wrong policies, or wrong institutions. Every man, on his entrance upon public life, has his "mount of temptation." If he courageously says, "Get thee behind me, Satan!" his subsequent path to honor and true success is assured. If he yields, he is lost. The sorceress, during more than one generation, was slavery. By her much fair speech and promises of promotion she caused many an ambitious statesman to yield to her, and "straightway he went after her as an ox goeth to the slaughter."

This truth of perilous partnerships is full of warnings to business men. Especially is it admonitory to young men who are anxious to reach wealth by short cuts and are not scrupulous as to the methods. The market is crowded with sharp schemers, the papers abound with glowing announcements of commercial ventures and "gilt-edged" enterprises. The number of credulous Jehoshaphats who are enticed into gold expeditions to Ophir, with Ahaziahs in the partnership, is almost past belief. The wrecks are well nigh as numerous. It is not only from wild schemes of speculation that danger arises. Many a merchant, banker, manufacturer, or tradesman has been induced by friends or partners to ally himself with methods and practices which his own conscience, in his better moments, did not approve; but he hushed conscience with the promise of big profits, or with the current sophistry, "Oh! everybody does such things!" The men who, like William E. Dodge, refuse to "break God's laws for a dividend" are not to be found in regiments. Commerce and trade, like politics, contain a thousand repetitions of that old Scripture line, "Because thou hast joined thyself with Ahaziah, the Lord hath wrecked thy works."

"Be ye not partakers of other men's sins" is a divine admonition that has not lost its solemn portent. Though hand join in hand, wrongdoing will not go unpunished; if not punished in this world, then surely it will be in the next. Just as certainly as that the wages of sin is death, so certain is it that eternity will reveal the fearful wreck of innumerable gold-ships—the "loss total, and no insurance."

THE HONEY OF THE WORD.

“SEE, how mine eyes have been enlightened, because I tasted a little of this honey.” So spake Jonathan, the true-hearted son of a false-hearted father. Saul had pronounced a curse upon any of his army who should taste of food during their pursuit of the enemy. But when the troops reached a forest where the bees had laid up their abundant stores, several honeycombs were found lying upon the earth. The prince-royal, not having heard of his father’s harsh edict, put forth the rod which was in his hand, and dipped it in a honeycomb and put it to his mouth; and his eyes were enlightened. Refreshment came to his hungry frame, and enlightenment to his eyes which were dim with faintness and fatigue.

What a beautiful parable this incident is to set forth one of the richest blessings of the Word of Life! The Psalmist extolled it as "sweeter than honey;" but he also exclaimed, "The entrance of Thy Word giveth light; yea, understanding to the simple." It is not the mere reading of the Word carelessly, or the hearing of it listlessly, but its entrance into the soul, which produces this inward illumination. Thousands of people listen to God's truths every Sabbath without any effect on the heart or the life. They do not take the truth into their souls, as Jonathan took the honey into his system. But when the Word is partaken of, and the Spirit accompanies it, there is a revelation made to the heart like that which the poor blind boy had after the operation of a skilful oculist. His mother led him out of doors, and taking off the bandage, gave him his first view of sunshine and flowers. "O mother!" he cried, "why did you not tell me it was so beautiful?" The tears started as she replied, "I tried to tell you, my dear, but you could not understand me." So the spiritual sight must be opened, in order that the spiritual glories may be discerned. Many a poor sinner has never found out what a glorious gospel our gospel is until he has swallowed the honey for himself.

Even as a mental discipline there is no book like God's Book. No other study so strengthens the understanding, clarifies the perceptions, and enlarges the views, so purifies the taste, invigorates the judgment, and educates the whole man. The humblest day-laborer who saturates his mind with this school-book from heaven becomes a superior man to his comrades—not merely a purer man, but a clearer-headed man. It was this honey from heaven which gave to the Puritans much of their sagacity, as well as all of their stubborn loyalty to the right. The secret of the superiority of the Scottish peasantry is found in that "big ha' Bible" which is the daily study at every cottage ingleside. What an argument this is for keeping God's own school-book for his children in every school of our land, high or humble. As the honey strewed the forest for Israel's common soldiers to partake of, so the Lord has sent down his Word for the masses.

It is more than light, for it is an enlightener.

Not only does it reveal the grandest and most elevating truths in the universe, but it improves the actual vision. It makes the blind to see, and the strong-sighted stronger. Who of us that has been terribly perplexed about questions of right and wrong, and been sorely puzzled as to our duty, has not caught a new view and a true view as soon as he dipped his rod into the honeycomb of God's Word? A single text once settled for me a vexed question of duty. Cowper found in the twenty-fifth verse of the third chapter of Romans the honey which brought light to his soul when overclouded with despair. John Wesley thrust his rod into this verse: "The law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death." Even Paul had not learned his own sin until the commandment against covetousness opened his eyes. The fifty-third chapter of Isaiah so enlightened the eye of the Ethiopian treasurer that he discovered Jesus the Lamb of God !

Ah, there is many a reader of these pages who can testify how the precious honey from heaven brought light and joy to his eyes when dimmed with grief. The exceeding great and precious promises were not only sweet, they were illuminating. They lighted up the valley of the shadow of death. They showed how crosses can be turned into crowns, and how losses can brighten into glorious gains. When in a sick-room I always dip my rod into the honeycomb of the fourteenth chapter of John. It brings Jesus there. One of my bravest Sunday-school teachers so fed on this honey that on her dying-bed she said, "My path through the valley is long, but 'tis bright all the way."

Nothing opens the sinner's eyes to see himself and to see the Saviour of sinners like the simple Word. The Bible is the book to reveal iniquity in the secret parts. If the young man will dip his rod into this warning, "Look not on the wine when it is red," he may discover that there is a nest of adders in the glass! If the scoffer can be induced to taste some of that honey which Christ gave to Nicodemus, he may find heaven and hell to be tremendous realities!

Brethren of the ministry, I do not know how you all may feel; but I am growing confident that our chief business is not only to eat hugely of this honey ourselves, but to tell our people where to dip their rods. We have got no new gospel for them—no “advanced thought” beyond Moses, John, and Paul. The honey lies thick on the ground. May the divine Spirit help us to point it out to blinded dying men!

CAN WE FEEL SURE?

It was said of a certain magnificent speech of Daniel Webster that "every word weighed a pound." But there is a line in the thirty-fifth Psalm—mostly made up of monosyllables—in which every word weighs a ton. David uttered it in a season of despondency, when he cried out, "Say unto my soul, I am thy salvation." The old monarch was in trouble. His own throne was assailed, and so he went to the Everlasting Throne. His own heart was assailed by doubts, and so he sought for a fresh and full assurance of salvation. Whatever David's own experiences may have been, he furnished a golden prayer for universal use in these pregnant, pithy words: "Say unto my soul, I am thy salvation."

The salvation which all of us most need is a deliverance from the guilt and dominion of sin—

to be liberated from the bondage of that great slave-holder the devil. Beset with temptations, we need succor when we are tempted. The only salvation "under heaven given among men" is by the atoning blood of Jesus and the regenerating power of the Holy Spirit. This is a full salvation, a complete salvation; it is God's masterpiece of mercy to us guilty, depraved, and dying sinners. Can this salvation be made sure to a man, and can he be sure that he possesses it?

We answer unhesitatingly, Yes. David did not ask for impossibilities when he asked God to assure him of his salvation. Paul knew what he was about when he said, "Know ye not your own selves, how that Jesus Christ is in you, except ye be reprobates?" There is no perhaps about the salvation of a true follower of Christ any more than there is about the rising of to-morrow's sun. It does not depend upon my say, or your say, or any man's say. Only God can give the decisive and infallible assurance to us that we are safe for this world and for eternity.

Let it be carefully noted that the prayer is that God would say unto the soul, "I am thy salvation." There is no audible voice addressed to the ear; in fact, multitudes hear the offer of salvation every Sabbath by the ear, and yet their hearts are as deaf as adders. What God says can only be heard by the heart. We would define faith to be heart-hearing. And unto the docile, believing soul God says wonderful things, and things to make the soul leap for joy. "This is a faithful saying and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners." I open the ivory chamber of John's Gospel, and read these words: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that heareth my word and believeth on him that sent me hath everlasting life and shall not come into condemnation." Again, Jesus says in the same Gospel, "This is the will of him that sent me, that every one which seeth the Son and believeth on him may have everlasting life." "My sheep hear my voice, and I know them and they follow me. And I give unto them eternal life, and they shall never perish; neither shall any man pluck them out of my hand." He does not affirm that we may never, in a fit of waywardness and pride, throw ourselves out of that almighty and loving hand. But he does declare that while we stay there we are safe. And, being safe, we have a right to know it, and to feel all the serenity and satisfaction which this ownership by the Lord Jesus can inspire.

Faith is the soul's trust in Jesus as our salvation. It ought to bring a delightful sense of security. But it does not always do so, because it is too weak and doubting to produce assurance. Faith is the milk, and assurance is the cream which rises on it. The richer the milk the more abundant will be the cream. Assurance is not essential to salvation, as faith is; for God will let a great many people into heaven who had a very feeble faith here on earth. Faith is life, though it be sometimes a very weak, anxious, burdened, and uncomfortable life. Assurance marks a higher degree of health, vigor, joy, and power to overcome. Peter possessed some faith when he screamed to his Master from the waves, "Lord, save me!" He had reached a much higher attainment by the Spirit when he exclaimed in the market-place of Jerusalem, "This is the stone which was set at naught of you builders, which is become the head of the corner." Saul of Tarsus had an infant faith born in his soul when he was groping about in the house of Ananias at Damascus. The infant had grown into a giant when Paul had reached up to the eighth chapter to the Romans, and could shout, "I know whom I have believed, and am persuaded that He is able to keep that which I have committed to Him." Jesus had really said to Paul, "I am thy salvation."

Paul had the witness of the Spirit that he was Christ's. There was an inward conviction and an outward life, and the two corresponded with each other. They both corresponded also to the Spirit's description of true piety in the Bible. When a tree produces the leaves of a pear and the fruit of the pear, we are sure that it is a pear-tree. When a man feels the love of Jesus in his soul and keeps the commandments of Jesus in his life, he has the witness of the Holy Spirit that he is in Christ. Being in Christ, he is safe. There is no condemnation to such a man. The Lord has said unto such a consistent believer, "I am thy salvation." But when an oily-tongued dissembler, who cheats his creditors or lives a life of secret uncleanness, rises in a prayer-meeting and prates glibly about his holiness or his sanctified attainments, he simply unmasks his own hypocrisy.

We have just said that assurance is not a positive essential of faith; but yet it is the privilege and the duty of a genuine Christian to possess the assurance of Christ's love and protection. Old Latimer used to say that when he had this steadfast trust in his Master he could face a lion; when he lost it, he was ready to run into a mouse-hole. Why should the soul to whom Jesus has said, "I am thy salvation," be continually worrying itself sick with doubts and fears? If I have put my everlasting all in Christ's hands, he is responsible for the trust—as long as I leave it with him.

Two men go out to Colorado and purchase tracts of mining-land. One of them spends half his time worrying about his deed, and in running to the clerk's office to see whether his title is good. While he is tormenting himself in this idiotic way, the other man has worked his gold-mine so industriously that he has sent fifty loads of solid ore to the crushing-mill. Brethren, if we have taken Christ's word, and committed our souls to his keeping and our lives to his disposal, let us not worry about our title-deeds to heaven. Let us understand the power of the two pronouns "my" and "thy." It is my soul to which the Almighty Jesus says, "I am thy salvation." Go about your life-work, brother, and do it honestly and thoroughly. God is responsible for the results and the reward. If I check my baggage to Chicago, it is not mine until I get there. It belongs to the baggage-master. Surely, I ought to have as strong a faith that my immortal soul is safe in Christ's keeping as I have that my trunk is safe in the charge of a railway officer.

Assurance of salvation by the Son of God is no modern discovery. It is not a new invention "patented" by any school of Bible students. It is as old as the cross of Calvary. Paul built his Epistle to the Romans on this rock. The Psalmist of Israel was seeking after it, in his troubles, when he cried out to the living God, "Say unto my soul, I am thy salvation!"

ASLEEP IN JESUS.

No scriptural description of death is so suggestive and so consoling as that which is conveyed by the familiar word sleep. It recurs often. Stephen the martyr breathes his sublime prayer, and then "he fell asleep." Our Lord said to his disciples, "Our friend Lazarus sleepeth; but I go that I may awake him out of sleep." Paul, in that transcendently sublime chapter on the resurrection, treats death as but the transient slumber of the body, to be followed by the glorious awakening at the sound of the last trumpet. And then he crowns it with that voice of the divine Spirit, that marvellous utterance which has been said and sobbed and sung in so many a house of bereavement: "I would not have you to be ignorant concerning them which are asleep; for if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." No three words are inscribed on more tombs or on more hearts than these: "Asleep in Jesus."

These declarations of God's Word describe death as simply the temporary suspension of bodily activities. Not a hint is given of a total end, an extinction, or an annihilation. The material body falls asleep, the immortal spirit being meanwhile in full activity; and the time is predicted when the body, called up from the tomb, shall reunite with the deathless spirit, and the man shall live on through eternity. What we call dying is only a momentary process. It is a flitting of the immortal tenant from the frail tent or tabernacle, which is so often racked with pain and waxes old into decay. Paul calls it a departure: "To depart and be with Christ." The spiritual tenant shuts up the windows of the earthly house ere he departs; he muffles the knocker at the ear, so that no sound can enter; he extinguishes the fire that glows about the heart, stops the warm currents that flow through the veins, and leaves the deserted house cold, silent, and motionless. We, the survivors, bend over the deserted heart-house; but there is neither voice nor hearing. We kiss the brow, and it is marble. The beloved sleeper is sleeping a sleep that thunders or earthquake cannot disturb. But what is there in this slumber of the body that suggests any fear that the ethereal essence of the spirit has become extinct or even suspended its activities? When the mother lays her darling in its crib, she knows that sleep simply means rest, refreshment, and to-morrow morning's brighter eye, nimbler foot, and the carol of a lark in her nursery. When you or I drop off into the repose of the night, we understand that the avenues of the five bodily senses are closed for a few hours; but the mind is, meanwhile, as busy as when we wake.

Death means just this: no more and no less. As Maclaren has vigorously said, "Strip the man of the disturbances that come from a fevered body, and he will have a calmer soul. Strip him of the hindrances which come from a body that is like an opaque tower around his spirit, with only a narrow crevice here and a narrow door there—five poor senses with which he is connected with the outer universe—and, surely, the spirit will have wider avenues out to God. It will have larger powers of reception, because it has become rid of the closer confinements of the fleshly tabernacle. 'They who die in Jesus live a larger, fuller, nobler life, by the very cessation of care, change, strife, and struggle. Above all, they live a fuller, grander life, because they 'sleep in Jesus' and are gathered into his embrace, and wake with him, clothed with white robes, awaiting the adoption, to wit, the redemption of the body.'" In God's good time, the slumbering body shall be resuscitated and shall be fashioned like to Christ's glorious body—i. e., it shall be transformed into a condition which shall meet the wants of a beatific soul in its celestial dwelling-place. Verily, with this transcendent blaze of revelation pouring into the believer's death-chamber and his tomb, we ought not to sorrow as they that have no hope.

In this view of death (which is God's own view) how vivid becomes the apostle's exclamation, "I am confident and willing rather to be absent from the body and to be present with the Lord." "Who is it that is to be absent? I, Paul—the living Paul—I can be entirely quit from that poor tabernacle of flesh and yet live! My body is no more Paul than the corn-ship was when it went to pieces on the shore of Melita and I escaped safe to land." Paul was entirely willing that the old scarred and weary body might be put to sleep, so that he might go home and be present with his Lord. Then mortality would be swallowed up of life. Go to sleep, poor, old, hard-worked body, the apostle seems to say, and Jesus will wake thee up in good time, and thou shalt be made like to the body of his glory, according to the working whereby he subdues all things unto himself.

Let us not be charged with pushing this Scripture simile too far when we hint that it illustrates the different feelings with which different persons regard the act of dying. When we are sleepy, we covet the pillow and the couch.

When work is to be done, when the duties of the day are pressing on us, then we are not only broad awake, but the more awake the better. Sleep then is repulsive. Even so do we see aged servants of God, who have finished up their life-work, and many a suffering invalid racked with incurable pains, who honestly long to die. They are sleepy for the rest of the grave and the home beyond it. Yet desire for death is not natural to the young, the vigorous, or especially to the servants of God who are most intent upon their high calling. These recoil from death, however saintly or spiritual they may be, or however strong be their convictions that heaven is infinitely better than this world. It is not merely the natural shrinking from death (which the man Christ Jesus felt in common with us), but the supreme idea of serving their God to the utmost possible limit. For Christ here, with Christ yonder, is the highest instinct of the Christian heart. The noble missionary, Judson, phrased it happily when he said, "I am not tired of my work, neither am I tired of the world; yet, when Christ calls me home, I shall go with the gladness of a boy bounding away from school." He wanted to toil for souls until he grew sleepy, and then he wanted to lay his body down to rest and to escape into glory.

A dying-bed is only the spot where the material frame falls asleep. Then we take up the slumbering form and gently bear it to its narrow bed in mother earth. Our very word "cemetery" describes this thought. It is derived from the Greek word κοιμητήριον (koimeterion), which signifies a sleeping-place. Greenwood is really a vast dormitory in which tens of thousands are laid to their last repose—some in their gorgeous environments of rosewood and marble, and others in the poor little trundle-beds of the paupers' plot. It is a mingled and promiscuous sleeping-place; but the Master "knoweth them that are his." They who sleep in him shall awake to be for ever with their Lord.

On this tremendous question of the resurrection of our loved ones and our reunion with them, our yearning hearts are satisfied with nothing less than certainly. Poetic fancies are gossamer: analogies from the sprouting of seeds and bulbs, probabilities, intuitions, and all philosophizings are too shadowy to rear a solid faith on. We demand absolute certainty, and there are just two truths that can give it. The first one is the actual fact of Christ's own resurrection from the death-slumber; the second is his omnipotent assurance that all they who sleep in him shall be raised up and be where he is for evermore. Those early Christians were wise in their generation when they carved on the tomb of the martyrs "In Jesu Christo obdormivit."—In Jesus Christ he fell asleep.

"Oh! precious tale of triumph this!
And martyr-blood shed to achieve it,
Of suffering past—of present bliss.
' In Jesu Christo obdormivit.'

"Of cherished dead be mine the trust,
Thrice-blessed solace to believe it,
That I can utter o'er their dust,
' In Jesu Christo obdormivit.'

THE SEVEN "BLESSEDs."

THERE are seven benedictions in the book of Revelation which will repay every Christian's closest study. The first occurs in the opening lines of John's Apocalypse: "Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this prophecy, and keep those things which are written therein." Just at the close of the Apocalypse is another similar passage: "Blessed is he that keepeth the sayings of the prophecy of this book." These two verses are like the golden clasps, one on each lid, that hold together a dear old family Bible. The divine commendation is here pronounced on the Bible-reader and the Bible-keeper. God's Word always honors itself. No man is fit to preach it who ever whiffles over the truthfulness and authority of its every page.

The next benediction is pronounced upon the gospel-guests: "Blessed are they who are called unto the marriage-supper of the Lamb."

This is what our sound old fathers style "effectual calling." They who are drawn by the attraction of the cross, and yield to that drawing, are renewed by the Holy Spirit. Theirs is a place at the celestial banquet. Upon them is put the clean linen and white which is the righteousness of Christ. How careful should every disciple be to walk unspotted from the world, for every stain looks ugly upon a white ground. Why should we wait until our arrival in heaven to look clean!

There is a hint as to the method of keeping thus, clearly given in the third benediction: "Blessed is he that watcheth and keepeth his garments, lest he walk naked and they see his shame." No believer can preserve the purity of his character without prayerful vigilance. "Watch!" And one reason for this watchfulness is that Christ's coming is to be as unannounced as the midnight visit of a burglar. The thief never sends us word that he is coming to steal our clothes. It will be a terrible thing to lose our wedding-garment. Old Dr. Alexander used to say with solemn tenderness, "I wont answer for any Christian while in an awful state of backsliding."

Upon the gospel-doers rests the sweet approval of the fourth benediction. It is the blessing upon those "that do His commandments." The evidence and the joy of discipleship both lie in obedience to Christ. This is what the world has a right to demand from us—a religion of fruits. Away with the wretched delusion that "good works" have no place in the Christian's salvation! Faith without works is dead.

He, and he only, who is born of Christ will be able to pass this searching ordeal. Christ's approval at the last great day will be, "Ye did it unto me."

The next blessing in John's wonderful Revelation is that angelic voice that floats over the resting-place of the pious dead. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord." To them the perils of the voyage are over. They have cast anchor in the haven. They are safe. Peter shall never deny again, and Paul will no more be obliged to battle with an unruly "body." Calvin and Wesley can clasp hands over the glorious fact that neither one of them shall ever fall from grace. That is a joyful anthem which sings itself so sweetly over a believer's dust, "Blessed is he, for he died in the Lord."

About the last one of the benedictions in this sublime book there has been no little controversy: "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection." Our Millenarian brethren make much of this passage; but none of their ingenious speculations seem to clarify the mystery that hangs over that word "first." It is enough for me that if I fall to sleep in Jesus, I shall awake with him. Little does the date trouble me, or the question of precedence. There is not an unmarked grave in all Christ's household of the slumberers. He will call them up at the last day. "Them which sleep in Jesus will God bring together with him." And when we all reach that celestial home, we shall see these seven "blesseds" shining like the seven candlesticks before the throne.
